SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

MONDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1931

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Seventy-second Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

CHARLES CURTIS, of Kansas, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following

PRAYER

Lord of all power and might, who alone canst turn the hearts of men after the counsel of Thine own will, be graciously pleased to direct us amid the perplexing problems of our world, and so rule the hearts of Thy servants, the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Members of the Congress, and all others in authority, that they may seek Thy glory and the safety, honor, and welfare of Thy people. Grant to our Nation a new birth in righteousness, though it be with the travail of repentence and sorrow; bestow upon us a more imperious responsiveness to duty, a swifter compassion with suffering, an utter loyalty to Thy will. Remove from us the spirit of worldliness, lest power become the counselor of our designs or material interests the criterion of our success.

Put to shame the false idols of every heart and fill us with a Christlike tenderness for all who are heavy laden or overborne with care. Give us grace fearlessly to contend against evil; and that we may reverently use our freedom, help us to employ it in the maintenance of justice among men and nations, to the glory of Thy holy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask consent to make a very brief statement concerning the status of the two pending contests touching the election of Mr. BAILEY, of North Carolina, and of Mr. BANKHEAD, of Alabama. It will be very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not wish to object to a statement by the Senator, but I understand it is a somewhat prolonged statement.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; it is not long.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well; I have no objection.

SENATORS FROM NORTH CAROLINA AND ALABAMA

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, before the oath of office is administered to Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, or to John H. Bankhead, of Alabama, I desire, as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to advise the Senate as to the pending contest between George M. Pritchard and Josiah W. Bailey involving the question whether the said George M. Pritchard or the said Josiah W. Bailey, or either of them, is entitled to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of North Carolina; also I desire to advise the Senate as to the status of the pending contest between J. Thomas Heflin and John H. Bankhead involving the question whether the said John H. Bankhead or the said J. Thomas Heflin, or either of them, is entitled to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama.

THE PRITCHARD-BAILEY CONTEST

Our record discloses that on March 3, 1931, Mr. Pritchard commenced the contest mentioned, which was thereupon on said day regularly referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The RECORD (vol. 74, pt. 7, p. 7305, 71st Cong., 3d sess.) shows that on the 4th day of March, 1931, as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I endeavored to be recognized in order that I might introduce and secure the passage of a resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to hear said contest and make report to the Senate. But the RECORD further discloses that Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma had the floor and declined to yield for that purpose, and that he held the floor until 12 o'clock noon of March 4, 1931, when the Seventy-first Congress adjourned without day. The resolution I endeavored to introduce and to have adopted, and which I shall hereafter introduce and ask for its passage, was as follows:

Resolution

Whereas on the 3d day of March, 1931, the Senate referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the pending contest between George M. Pritchard and Josiah W. Bailey involving the question whether the said George M. Pritchard or the said Josiah W. Bailey, or either of them, is entitled to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of North Carolina: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is hereby authorized to hear and determine said contest and to take such evidence as it may deem proper in order to determine the questions involved, and certify its conclusions to the Senate.

Said committee is authorized by itself or by any subcommittee to investigate the questions aforesaid, and shall have authority to act by or through such agents or representatives as it may see fit to designate.

Said committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have power to issue subpœnas and require the production of all papers, books, documents, or other evidence pertinent to said investigation, and to impound ballot boxes and all records and paraphernalia used in the election in question, and said committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of the Congress, and to hold its sessions at such places as it may deem proper.

It shall have authority to employ clerks and other necessary assistance and to employ stenographers at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per 100 words, and to cause to be taken and recorded all evidence received by the committee, and to have said evidence printed for the information of the Senate.

The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and his deputies and assistants are hereby required to attend the said Committee on Privileges and Elections or any subcommittee thereof, and to execute its directions.

The chairman of the committee and each and every member thereof is hereby empowered to administer oaths and generally have such powers and perform such duties as are necessary or incident to the exercise of the powers and duties imposed by this resolution.

Said committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

The cost of investigations and proceedings in pursuance of the foregoing to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and not to exceed $25,000.

It follows that in the absence of authority so to do the Committee on Privileges and Elections has not heard and that it is not ready to report to the Senate on the said contest.

If the Senate shall pass the resolution just called to its attention, I shall promptly appoint a subcommittee to hear said contest and the Committee on Privileges and Elections will report to the Senate its findings and conclusions at the earliest practicable date.

THE HEFLIN-BANKHEAD CONTEST

Our record discloses that on February 24, 1931, Senator Heflin commenced the contest mentioned, which was thereupon on said day referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The RECORD discloses that on February 28, 1931, the Senate passed the following resolution (S. Res. 485):

Resolution

Whereas on the 24th day of February, 1931, the Senate referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the pending contest between J. Thomas Heflin and John H. Bankhead involving the question whether the said Heflin or the said Bankhead, or either of them, is entitled to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is hereby authorized to hear and determine said contest and to take such evidence as it may deem proper in order to determine the questions involved, and certify its conclusions to the Senate.

Said committee is authorized, by itself or by any subcommittee, to investigate the questions aforesaid, and shall have authority to act by or through such agents or representatives as it may see fit to designate.

Said committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have power to issue subpœnas and require the production of all papers, books, documents, or other evidence pertinent to said investigation, and said committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of the Congress, and to hold its sessions at such places as it may deem proper.

It shall have authority to employ clerks and other necessary assistance and to employ stenographers at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words, and to cause to be taken and recorded all evidence received by the committee, and to have said evidence printed for the information of the Senate.

The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and his deputies and assistants are hereby required to attend the said Committee on Privileges and Elections or any subcommittee thereof, and to execute its directions.

The chairman of the committee and each and every member thereof is hereby empowered to administer oaths and generally have such powers and perform such duties as are necessary or incident to the exercise of the powers and duties imposed by this resolution.

Said committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

The cost of investigations and proceedings in pursuance of the foregoing to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and not to exceed $25,000 in addition to any unexpended balance of the sum previously appropriated in Senate Resolution 467.

I advise the Senate that as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I appointed Senators HASTINGS (chairman), WATSON, MOSES, GEORGE, and BRATTON as members of a subcommittee to hear said contest. I beg to further advise the Senate that the subcommittee entered upon the hearing of said contest, but, as I am informed by its chairman, has not been able to finish the hearing and report to the standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Senator HASTINGS informs me as follows:

DECEMBER 5, 1931.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
Chairman of Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHORTRIDGE: In response to your request that I make a brief written report of the status of the investigation in the Alabama senatorial contest, which was referred by you to a subcommittee, of which I am chairman, I desire to say that shortly after the adjournment of the Senate I organized a force to collect the ballot boxes from Alabama and to count the ballots. This work has been completed and reports have been submitted to the other members of the subcommittee.

Some time ago the committee met for the purpose of hearing counsel on both sides discuss the question of the legality of the primary election in Alabama in 1930, and its effect upon the subsequent general election with respect to Mr. Bankhead.

The committee has been in session for three days hearing arguments on the question of the legality of the expenditures by Mr. Bankhead.

The only evidence we have at hand is that which was discovered in conducting the recount of the ballots and some important admissions that have been made to the committee. The committee has not had the opportunity to hear witnesses for the contestant in support of the charges of fraud alleged by him.

It has not been possible for the committee to meet in executive session and discuss the important legal matters that have been argued before it. If it had been possible to have done this, I should have undertaken to submit to the full committee a report of the work done up to the present time.

For your information I desire to say that to some members of the subcommittee, at least, the following important questions ought to be submitted to the full committee and by it to the Senate.

First. Whether the Alabama primary, which nominated Mr. Bankhead for the office of United States Senator, was in violation of the laws of the State of Alabama and was therefore void; and if so, what effect that had upon the general election with respect to Mr. Bankhead.

Second. Whether Mr. Bankhead, according to his sworn statements, violated the Alabama law or the Federal law relative to expenditures and is thereby disqualified to hold the office.

Third. Whether the facts disclosed by the recount of the ballots show such a disregard of the election laws of Alabama by the election officials as to make it impossible for the Senate to ascertain a definite result.

Fourth. Whether, if the ballots that are tainted with law violations should be excluded from the count because of the opportunity offered for fraud in such violations, there would be sufficient valid ballots left to enable the Senate to ascertain the will of the electorate of Alabama.

The mere tabulation of the ballots does not show any material change in the results announced by the election officials of Alabama. The difficulty arises, however, in the discovery that the election officers disregarded the election laws of Alabama. Out of a total of 2,043 boxes examined not a single one could be found where the law had been fully complied with. There were literally thousands of violations of the election laws. These were of such a character that, in my judgment, they raise the serious question as to whether it can be said that there was a legal election of a United States Senator in Alabama in 1930. The committee is ready to continue its investigations, but before it can do so it will be necessary for additional funds to be appropriated.

Very truly yours,

DANIEL O. HASTINGS,
Chairman Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections.

It follows, therefore, Mr. President, that your Committee on Privileges and Elections as of now is not ready to report to the Senate its findings and conclusions.

I beg to add that when the subcommittee shall have made its report to the Committee on Privileges and Elections your standing committee will thereafter report its findings and conclusions to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

I have made this statement, Mr. President, in justice to the committee, and particularly the subcommittee, and to the end that all rights of the parties involved are not to be prejudiced by the proceedings further to be taken this day.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I present the certificate of election of WARREN R. AUSTIN, of the State of Vermont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The certificate will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF VERMONT.

AUSTIN was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Vermont a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired portion of the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1929, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Frank L. Greene.

Witness: His excellency our governor, Stanley C. Wilson, and our seal hereto affixed at Montpelier this 7th day of April, A. D. 1931.

By the governor: STANLEY C. WILSON, Governor.

[SEAL.] RAWSON C. MYRICK, Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The certificate will be placed on file, and the Senator from Vermont will escort the Senator elect to the desk.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WATSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 1), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the resolution just adopted the Chair appoints Mr. WATSON and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas as the committee on the part of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE

Mr. MCNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 2), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 3), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

DEATH OF SENATOR CARAWAY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, Hon. T. H. CARAWAY, which occurred at Little Rock, Ark., on November 6 last.

At this time I submit the following resolutions, for the consideration of which I ask unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 4) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. THADDEUS H. CARAWAY, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF SENATOR MORROW

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the sad duty devolves upon me to announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, Hon. DWIGHT W. MORROW, at Englewood, N. J., October 5, 1931. Mr. BARBOUR, who has been appointed by the Governor of New Jersey to succeed the late Senator MORROW, is present, but it has been customary, on the death of a Senator, that the Senate be notified and a resolution be adopted, and that his successor wait until the following day before taking the oath of office. So, out of respect to the memory of my late colleague, Mr. BARBOUR is going to wait until to-morrow before he presents himself to be sworn in.

I send to the desk resolutions, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolutions (S. Res. 5) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. DWIGHT W. MORROW, late a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senators CARAWAY and MORROW, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 8, 1931, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1931

This day, in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, the Members elect of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-second Congress assembled in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by Hon. William Tyler Page, Clerk of the last House.

Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the last House, offered the following

PRAYER

Infinite God-soul of our soul! Marvelous truth that bridges time and eternity and makes them one. We wait a moment; our memories are stirred. Before us is the image of our most notable one. A sad and mournful yesterday dictates our sorrow. Through the years he camped with us in the embrace of a sweet and beautiful fraternity. But the night came, then the morning broke, and he was carried upward in the harmony and symmetry of his great heart beyond the zenith and the slope of the widening sky. Blessed Father, move upon our hearts. Direct our President and all his counsellors and endue them with great wisdom and strength. Reach down, O God, and touch the life of every Member of this Congress. Give wise purpose, unity, and upward movement to its history. Abide with us each day, so that the heroism of truth, of integrity and cooperation shall become contagious, until sacred forces shall lift our whole land upon a tide of universal patriotic devotion to the common good. As we apprehend its drift may we set our sails toward this glorious goal. Let not the carriage of our faculties distress us. May we bear ourselves toward one another after the pattern of Him—the ideal Teacher. Inspire poise and self-control in all deliberations, and in character and in conduct help us to exercise a fine conception of human life. We long and pray for that good will that shall bring into fellowship all citizens and all sections of our country, so they shall aspire for those standards that make a nation truly great. Merciful God of the eternities, look with loving favor upon our country and divinely urge us as Members and officers of this Chamber to lay our best gifts in the lap of the Republic while a stainless splendor crowns her brow sublime. Turn all faces upward, O Light of Lights, that we may realize that the radiant sky is forever bigger than the floating cloud. Amen.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3

Garner	Schneider	Snell

The CLERK. Before proceeding with the announcement of the result of the vote, the Clerk is requested to announce that immediately following the swearing in of Members votes will be taken upon the election of the officers of the House.

The tellers agree in their tally. Total number of votes cast, 430, of which Hon. JOHN N. GARNER has received 218, Hon. BERTRAND H. SNELL, 207, Hon. GEORGE J. SCHNEIDER, a Representative elect from the State of Wisconsin, 5, and three Members answering "present." Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, a Representative elect from the State of Texas, having received a majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives. [Prolonged applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RAINEY; and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SNELL; and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BYRNS; and the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. TILSON, will please conduct the Speaker elect to the chair.

The committee appointed by the Clerk escorted Mr. GARNER to the Speaker's chair.

Mr. SNELL. My colleagues of the House of Representatives, it is indeed a pleasure to have this opportunity to present to you the newly elected Speaker of the Seventy-second Congress.

I have always been a firm believer in the party system of government, and consider that country specially favored that has two strong, evenly divided political parties. Of course, from a personal standpoint I might be willing to change somewhat the division that apparently exists at the present time. [Laughter.]

As I look over the long list of distinguished men who have occupied this high position—and there is no higher honor in the gift of any legislative body in the world—I find no one of these men has ever risen to the position of Speaker by mere luck or accident, but rather as the result of long, intelligent, efficient service and of undoubted proven ability to perform the duties of this great office.

The gentleman from Texas, by native ability, by outstanding personality, by long service, and a complete understanding of the duties and responsibilities of Speaker, is exceptionally well qualified to fill that position, and I predict he will make one of the great Speakers of the present generation. I congratulate him on having reached the goal of his ambition and wish him every success in his work.

My colleagues, I now present your newly elected Speaker, the Hon. JOHN NANCE GARNER, of Texas. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I present you the gavel.

The SPEAKER. Ladies and gentlemen of the Seventy-second Congress, I want to express my keen appreciation of my friend SNELL'S introductory remarks. As many of you are aware, Mr. SNELL and myself have known each other for many years, and I believe I speak the sentiments of the older Members of the House who have had association with him when I say that he is one of the most dependable men that has ever been elected to this body. [Applause.] It will be a great pleasure for me to cooperate with him in the service of the country.

Ordinarily I would extend thanks to the entire House for my election to this high office, but, unfortunately, I did not get all of the votes. Therefore I must in that particular confine myself to the ladies and gentlemen who have expressed their confidence in me by the vote just taken. I am deeply grateful and sincerely appreciative of the confidence that you have expressed in me. I am not unmindful of the responsibilities, and, with the cooperation of those who have expressed their confidence in me—and I expect and hope also of the entire membership of the House—I hope to perform the duties of the office acceptably to all.

Ordinarily this would be an occasion when I might express the hopes and aspirations of the House of Representatives in its legislative program for the coming session of Congress, but at the moment I do not feel at liberty—in fact, I do not think it advisable that I should undertake to make a statement on that subject. At a later date—and I hope at an early date—I expect to make to you a complete statement touching that program. Also, it is customary for a Member assuming this place to indulge in some promises as to what he hopes to do as your presiding officer. I made no promises to secure this preferment, and I have none to make now.

The oath of office that I am about to take carries with it the only promise it is necessary for any American citizen to make, to assure the country that he expects to devote his best efforts to its service.

That oath of office I am ready to take at the present moment, and I ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to administer it. [Applause.]

Mr. POU administered the oath of office to the Speaker.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS ELECT

The SPEAKER. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, at the last Congress, after conference with my deceased friend, Mr. Longworth, it was decided that the better method of swearing in the membership was to swear in the entire House at one time, instead of swearing in the Members by States, as has been the custom for some hundred years. So I am going to ask each Member of the House to rise in his place and allow me to administer the oath of office.

The Members and Delegates rose in their places, and the Speaker administered the oath of office.

MAJORITY LEADER

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, the caucus of the Democratic Members of the House has selected Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, as majority leader for the Seventy-second Congress. [Applause.]

ELECTION OF OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The next business before the House is the election of the officers of the House.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD] offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 1

Resolved, That South Trimble, of the State of Kentucky, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That Kenneth Romney, of the State of Montana, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives;

That Joseph J. Sinnott, of the State of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That Finis E. Scott, of the State of Tennessee, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives; and

That Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., of the District of Columbia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the direction of the Republican conference, I offer an amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Mr. HAWLEY moves to amend the resolution by striking out—

"That South Trimble, of the State of Kentucky, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives"—

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That William Tyler Page, of the State of Maryland, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives; "—

And by striking out—

"That Kenneth Romney, of the State of Montana, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives"—

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That Joseph G. Rodgers, of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives; "—

And by striking out—

"That Joseph J. Sinnott, of the State of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives"—

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That Bert W. Kennedy, of the State of Michigan, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives; "—

And by striking out—

"That Finis E. Scott, of the State of Tennessee, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives"—

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That Frank W. Collier, of the State of Wisconsin, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be divided for the question so as to cover each of the officers, and, Mr. Speaker, I further ask unanimous consent that instead of a yea-and-nay vote on these amendments the vote be taken on the individuals; that is, as the roll is called Members vote for the individuals by their respective names.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. RAINEY and Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest it would take a long time to do that. Why not vote en bloc?

Mr. HAWLEY. The purpose, Mr. Speaker, is to give the Members of the House an opportunity to vote on each of the proposed officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] does not call for a separate vote.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, the proposition just made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] will keep us here all night. We are all going to be in our seats, as far as we are concerned. We will have no difficulty in keeping the Democrats present. We have a clear majority, so why not proceed in the usual way?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the apparent opposition, I withdraw the proposal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to withdraw his proposal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the resolution was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Republican conference unanimously selected as Chaplain of the House the present Chaplain, Dr. James Shera Montgomery, and we want to join in his unanimous election.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The officers elect will come forward and take the oath of office.

The officers elect appeared in the well of the House, and the oath of office was administered by the Speaker.

Recognition for the motions shall be in the order in which they have been entered on the Journal.

"'When any motion under this rule shall be called up, the bill or resolution shall be read by title only. After 20 minutes' debate, one-half in favor of the proposition and one-half in opposition thereto, the House shall proceed to vote on the motion to discharge. If the motion prevails to discharge the Committee on Rules from any resolution pending before the committee, the House shall immediately vote on the adoption of said resolution, the Speaker not entertaining any dilatory or other intervening motion except one motion to adjourn, and, if said resolution is adopted, then the House shall immediately proceed to its execution. If the motion prevails to discharge one of the standing committees of the House from any public bill or resolution pending before the committee, it shall then be in order for any Member who signed the motion to move that the House proceed to the immediate consideration of such bill or resolution (such motion not being debatable), and such motion is hereby made of high privilege; and if it shall be decided in the affirmative, the bill shall be immediately considered under the general rules of the House, and if unfinished before adjournment of the day on which it is called up it shall remain the unfinished business until it is fully disposed of. Should the House by vote decide against the immediate consideration of such bill or resolution, it shall be referred to its proper calendar and be entitled to the same rights and privileges that it would have had had the committee to which it was referred duly reported same to the House for its consideration: Provided, That when any perfected motion to discharge a committee from the consideration of any public bill or resolution has once been acted upon by the House it shall not be in order to entertain during the same session of Congress any other motion for the discharge from that committee of said measure, or from any other committee of any other bill or resolution substantially the same, relating in substance to or dealing with the same subject matter, or from the Committee on Rules of a resolution providing a special order of business for the consideration of any other such bill or resolution, in order that such action by the House on a motion to discharge shall be res adjudicata for the remainder of that session: Provided further, That if before any one motion to discharge a committee has been acted upon by the House there are on the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees other motions to discharge committees from the consideration of bills or resolutions substantially the same, relating in substance to or dealing with the same subject matter, after the House shall have acted on one motion to discharge, the remaining said motions shall be stricken from the Calendar on Motions to Discharge Committees and not acted on during the remainder of that session of Congress.'"

"That Rule XXVIII be amended by inserting after paragraph 1a a new paragraph to be known as paragraph 1½a, as follows:

"'After House conferees on any bill or resolution in conference between the House and Senate shall have been appointed for 20 calendar days and shall have failed to make a report, it is hereby declared to be a motion of the highest privilege to move to discharge said House conferees and to appoint new conferees, or to instruct said House conferees; and, further, during the last six days of any session of Congress, it shall be a privileged motion to move to discharge, appoint, or instruct House conferees after House conferees shall have been appointed 36 hours without having made a report.'"

During the reading of the resolution the following occurred:

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt the reading, I would like to propound an inquiry to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

The SPEAKER. Except by unanimous consent, the gentleman can not stop the reporting of the resolution.

Mr. PURNELL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may offer a suggestion to the gentleman from North Carolina in the interest of the adoption of sane, sensible rules, which we all seek to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PURNELL. I want to suggest to the gentleman that he let this matter lay over, or at least the proposed amendments, until they can be printed. I understand the resolution is not in print, and as the Speaker himself has well said, this is perhaps one of the most important moves that will be made in this Congress—the revision of the rules. The individual Members can not possibly follow them. Even those of us who are on the Rules Committee and have tried to do so, have been unable to do it. If they might be printed and lay over, I think they could be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. POU. I may say to my friend from Indiana that there would be no rules under which the House could operate. If I could get unanimous consent, I would be willing to adopt the rules of the Seventy-first Congress, and the amendment of the rules might go over until to-morrow.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I hope the gentleman will not do that. If we are going to have any rules, let us have the complete rules. If unanimous consent is required, I certainly should object.

Mr. CRISP. I object to that proposition, Mr. Speaker.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Republican conference will meet in this room, with the kind permission of our distinguished Speaker, following the adjournment of the session to-day.

THE RULES

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any rules to guide the procedure up to this point, I desire to inquire whether or not, after the presentation of the rules by the gentleman from North Carolina, and other gentlemen on the Democratic side who may present rules, whether the Speaker will recognize other Members on the question before the House—the adoption of the rules?

The SPEAKER. Of course, unless the previous question is moved, the Chair will indulge the House as long as anyone desires recognition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That I know. In the absence of any rule will the Chair recognize Members before the motion on the previous question is made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has propounded a parliamentary inquiry and the Chair will answer it. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to ask whether or not anyone can offer any amendments under the present parliamentary rules. My recollection is that Speaker Longworth held in the Sixty-ninth Congress that parliamentary law applying to this body included the rules of the House in the previous Congress as far as they were applicable, and in this instance the rules of the House in the Seventy-first Congress would give the gentleman from North Carolina the floor until he yielded.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] that I have consulted my majority leader and the gentleman who makes this motion, my friend from North Carolina [Mr. POU], and that I am perfectly willing for the whole matter of the consideration of the rules to go over until to-morrow. I objected to the proposition to adopt the rules of the Seventy-first Congress and to leave out of them the proposed changes. I can not and will not consent to that. If the whole matter goes over, I am quite acquiescent to that; and I want to say to my friend from Indiana that these rules were printed for the use of the caucus, just as you gentlemen printed yours, and the gentleman had a copy of them Sunday and talked to me over the phone about them, and I advised the gentleman exactly what this motion would be that is now made, and stated that there would be included in the motion every rule in that pamphlet, eliminating the rule dealing with the Private Calendar, and changing 100 to 145.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. PURNELL. The statement the gentleman has made is exactly correct, but I am only one Member on this side. The rest of the membership have not seen the rules, and they don't know a thing about the proposal.

Mr. CRISP. I have not the slightest objection to gentlemen knowing them. I want the Members to hear them, and if they will study them I am sure they will be in favor of them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] intend taking the floor to-day and clarifying the rules and answering any questions that may be asked?

Mr. CRISP. The leader suggested he desired me to do that, and I am prepared to proceed now or at any other time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. POU. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Inasmuch as it is apparent we are approaching an agreement that might possibly carry over the consideration of this matter until to-morrow, and inasmuch as we have some subsequent business that we desire to present before we adjourn to-day, of course it will be understood, as stated by the Speaker, if this agreement is carried into effect, we will have the right to carry forward our program of electing the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee before we adjourn.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, that would be extremely dangerous, and so far as I am concerned I shall resist any action in this House that in any way may be construed as adopting the rules of the last Congress for this Congress.

Mr. RAINEY. I may say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] that we are very anxious to elect the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May not that be done by unanimous consent?

Mr. RAINEY. It is our committee on committees, and I hope it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In view of the fact that the amendments of the rules are important and this is a controversial matter, in view of the fact that the Republicans have held a caucus, or a conference, and have passed upon a set of rules, and in view of the further fact that the Democrats have held a conference, or a caucus, and have settled upon rules, and in view of the further fact that the Republican membership of the House have no information as to the rules to be presented by the Democrats, and I assume the Democrats have no information as to the rules to be presented by the Republicans I therefore ask unanimous consent that the matter of the consideration of the rules go over until to-morrow and that in the meantime there be a print of the proposed rules suggested by the Democrats and the proposed rules suggested by the Republicans so that the House may be fully advised when we come to a vote as to what are the proposed changes.

Mr. POU. I am willing to agree to any arrangement for debate on this amendment.

Mr. PURNELL. Is it the gentleman's intention to yield time to this side of the House?

Mr. POU. I am willing to yield time to that side of the House to use as that side of the House sees fit but with the understanding that I do not yield the floor.

Mr. PURNELL. May I put a further question? Is it the intention of the gentleman to yield for the purpose of offering amendments?

Mr. POU. No.

Mr. MICHENER. I feel sure that it will help the procedure if we may have the amendments to the rules printed so that we may know what they are.

Mr. MAPES. A parliamentary inquiry Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina to say that he would not yield the floor for the purpose of allowing an amendment to his motion. I would like to ask the Speaker if it is not a fact, even though he does not yield the floor for that purpose and the previous question should be ordered on the resolution, that some Member on this side would have the right to move to recommit or move to amend the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Within the spirit of the rules of the Seventy-first Congress on the motion to recommit, the Chair thinks that they would have that right.

Mr. MAPES. I think the ruling of the Chair is correct. If the Chair will recollect, Speaker Clark, at the beginning of the Sixty-third Congress, ruled to the same effect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is familiar with that ruling.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the amendment to the rules of the House, I am wiling that the whole matter should go over until to-morrow and that it come up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. PURNELL. Including the amendment offered?

Mr. CRISP. That has been read and will go into the RECORD.

Mr. MICHENER. The Republican amendment has not been read, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that all amendments suggested by the Democrats be printed in the RECORD and all amendments suggested by the Republicans also be printed in the RECORD, so that we may have before us what we are to vote upon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, as the gentleman has already pointed out, those will be printed in the RECORD. If gentlemen on the other side ask unanimous consent to have their proposals printed in the RECORD, that is an independent proposition from that side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution be permitted to go over until to-morrow, to become pending business, that the resolution be printed in the RECORD as read from the desk, and that such additional suggestions as the independent resolution by the Republican side be also printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, it is understood, I take it, that the matter of the rules will be the first order of business to-morrow.

Mr. POU. In so far as I can bring that result about; yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that that will be a privileged matter, which could be brought up at any time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Other important matters may come in that may take a great deal of time. To my mind there is nothing more important than the adoption of the rules, because they are the only guidance we have as to our mode of procedure. It seems to me that we could well agree to take that matter up first. I am extremely anxious about this. Will the gentleman from Illinois inform the House that it is his intention to call up the rules the first thing to-morrow?

Mr. RAINEY. That is my intention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to be sure that the gentleman's request provides for the printing of what are now the minority resolutions in the RECORD, as adopted by the minority conference.

Mr. POU. I have no objection to that, although I did not include that in my request.

Mr. PURNELL. I understood the Speaker to put it in that way, and I want to know if that is his interpretation of it.

Mr. POU. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request once more as he understands it. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the pending resolution go over until to-morrow, that it be the pending business, that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, that such additional amendments or suggestions as the Republicans may have to make be also printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TENTATIVE PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE RULES OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS AS APPROVED BY THE REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE

Resolved, That clause 3, Rule XIII, be amended to read as follows:

"3. After a bill which has been favorably reported shall be upon either the House or Union Calendar, any Member may file with the Clerk a notice that he desires such a bill placed upon a special calendar to be known as the "Consent Calendar." On the first Monday of each month immediately after the reading of the Journal, and on the third Monday of each month immediately after the disposition of motions to instruct committees which may be called up, the Speaker shall direct the Clerk to call the bills which have been for three days upon the "Consent Calendar." Should two objections be made to the consideration of any bill so called, it shall immediately be stricken from such calendar, but such bill may be restored to the calendar at the instance of the Member, and if again objected to by five or more Members, it shall be immediately stricken from such calendar, and shall not thereafter be placed thereon: Provided, That the same bill shall not be called twice on the same legislative day.

"On the second and fourth Saturdays of each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar. Bills shall be called up in the order in which they appear on the Private Calendar. When a bill is called up it shall be first read by the Clerk and if there is objection to its consideration general debate shall be had on the bill. Such debate shall be limited to 20 minutes—10 minutes for and 10 minutes against—and the Chairman is charged with the strict enforcement of this limitation on debate. After such debate if five objections are made to the consideration the bill shall be passed over until the bills remaining on the calendar on that date have first been called. At the expiration of general debate, or after the first reading if no such debate is had, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule. When bills thus objected to are subsequently called for consideration for amendment under the 5-minute rule, under this rule they shall be considered unless the question of consideration is raised, in which event debate shall be limited to 10 minutes—5 minutes for and 5 minutes against such question. If the Committee of the Whole House determines the question of consideration in the affirmative, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule. If, however, the Committee of the Whole House determines the question of consideration in the negative, the bill shall be laid aside until the committee arises, whereupon it shall be reported back to the House with the adverse recommendation. Any bill under this rule reported back to the House with an adverse recommendation shall automatically be recommitted to the standing committee reporting it and said bill shall not again be reported during the same Congress."

Resolved, That clause 4 of Rule XIII of the House be amended by striking out the words "of motions to instruct committees" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "of motions to discharge committees."

Resolved, That the proviso of clause 7 of Rule XXIV be amended as follows: Strike out the words "two hours" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hour"; and strike out the words "two Wednesdays" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one Wednesday."

Resolved, That clause 4 of Rule XXVII be amended to read as follows:

"A Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to discharge a standing committee of the House from the consideration of a public bill or resolution which has been referred to it 30 calendar days prior thereto (but only one motion may be presented for each bill or resolution). The motion shall be placed in the custody of the Clerk, who shall arrange some convenient place for the signature of Members. A signature may be withdrawn by a Member in writing at any time before the motion is entered on the Journal. When Members to the total number of 145 have signed the motion, it shall be entered on the Journal, printed with the signatures thereto in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and referred to the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees.

"On the second and fourth Monday of each month, immediately after the approval of the Journal, any Member who has signed a motion to discharge which has been on the calendar at least 20 legislative days prior thereto and seeks recognition shall be recognized for the purpose of calling up the motion, and the House shall proceed to its consideration in the manner herein provided without intervening motion except one motion to adjourn. Recognition for the motions shall be in the order in which they have been entered on the Journal.

"When any motion under this rule shall be called up, the bill or resolution shall be read by title only. After one hour's debate, one-half in favor of the proposition and one-half in opposition thereto, the House shall proceed to vote on the motion to discharge: Provided, That as a substitute for the motion to discharge, one motion shall be in order to instruct. If the motion prevails to discharge one of the standing committees of the House from the consideration of any public bill or resolution pending before the committee, it shall then be in order for any Member who signed the motion to move that the House proceed to the immediate consideration of such bill or resolution (such motion not being debatable), and such motion is hereby made of high privilege; and if it shall be decided in the affirmative, the bill shall be immediately considered under the general rules of the House, and if it is unfinished before adjournment on the day on which it is called up it shall remain the unfinished business until it is fully disposed of (such privilege as attaches to the said bill or resolution, however, shall not supersede the provisions of clause 9 of Rule XVI). Should the House by vote decide against the immediate consideration of such bill or resolution, it shall be referred to its proper calendar and be entitled to the same rights and privileges that it would have had had the committee to which it was referred duly reported same to the House for its consideration: Provided, That, when any perfected motion to discharge a committee from the consideration of any public bill or resolution has once been acted upon by the House, it shall not be in order to entertain any other motion for the discharge of a committee from the consideration of the said measure during the same session of Congress."

Resolved, That Rule X be amended as follows:

"6. A standing committee of the House shall meet to consider any bill or resolution pending before it: (1) on all regular meeting days selected by the committee; (2) upon the call of the chairman of the committee; (3) if the chairman of the committee, after three days' consideration, refuses or fails, upon the written request of at least three members of the committee, to call a special meeting of the committee within seven calendar days from the date of said request, then, upon the filing with the clerk of the committee of the written and signed call of a majority of the committee for a special meeting of the committee, the committee shall meet on the day and hour specified in said written request. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the committee to notify all members of the committee in the usual way of such called special meeting.

"The rules of the House are hereby made the rules of its standing committees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day is hereby made a motion of high privilege in said committees."

Resolved, That clause 4 of Rule I be amended by inserting, after the word "then," the words "10 minutes or more than," so as to read:

"4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and subpœnas of, or issued by order of, the House, and decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal by any Member, on which questions or order or appeal no Member shall speak more than 10 minutes or more than once, unless by permission of the House."

Resolved, That Rule XX be amended by adding a new clause, as follows:

"3. When any amendment of the Senate to any House bill is considered in the Committee of the Whole, it shall be considered therein by paragraphs or sections, under the same rules for debate and amendment as if it were an original bill."

Resolved, That clause 45 of Rule XI be amended by inserting, after the last semicolon therein, the words: "the Committee on the Library, on all matters referred to them; " so as to read:

"The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Rules, on rules, joint rules, and order of business; the Committee on Elections, on the right of a Member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the Committee on Appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills authorizing the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on the Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroads and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers; the Committee on the Territories, bills for the admission of new States; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Invalid Pensions, general pension bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or the two Houses; the Committee on the Library, on all matters referred to them; and the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of the contingent fund of the House."

Resolved, That Clause I of Rule XII be amended by adding to the committee assignments of delegates, after the word "Territories," the following: "and Naval Affairs; and two on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and Immigration and Naturalization."

SENATE

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1931

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who bringest forth from Thy treasure house things old and new for man's instruction, unfold to us in this fateful hour the true parable of life. May the voice of the past recall to us our blessings and persuade us to a thoughtful mood. May the voice of the present with its clarion call to a great emprise inspire us with new visions for the future. May the radiant beam of Hope, prophetic mistress of reality, who dares to look upon the naked face of life all unabashed, bestow upon our work an added grace, a beautifying touch that shall reveal our noble kinship with Him who is the eternal hope of all our race, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Morrow, is filled by election as provided by law.

By the governor:

Governor.

[SEAL.] THOMAS A. MATHIS,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The certificate will be placed on file.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to raise a constitutional question with regard to the matter of Mr. BARBOUR's appointment. With the consent of the Senate, I offer first a resolution to see if there is any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 6), as follows:

Resolved, That a United States Senator, duly elected to such office in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, becomes a Member of the United States Senate on the beginning of the term of office for which he was elected, and his membership in the United States Senate is not dependent upon the date of the presentation of his credentials or upon the taking of the prescribed oath of office; that his membership in the Senate is not delayed or shortened by delay in the presentation or acceptance of his credentials or the taking of the prescribed oath; that the late Senator Dwight W. Morrow was the duly elected United States Senator from the State of New Jersey and that his term of office was to commence on March 4, 1931; that, notwithstanding the fact that he had no opportunity to take the oath of office and did not take the oath of office, he was a Member of the United States Senate, and that his death subsequent to the 4th of March, 1931, and prior to the 7th of December, 1931, the date of the convening of the Seventy-second Congress, created a vacancy in such office; that, under the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of New Jersey, the Governor of the State of New Jersey was authorized to fill such vacancy by appointment; that, in pursuance of such authority, he has appointed and issued credentials of appointment to W. WARREN BARBOUR, and that, by virtue of such appointment and by authority of such credentials, the said W. WARREN BARBOUR is a Member of the United States Senate.

Resolved further, That his credentials be accepted, and that he be administered the oath of office and permitted to take his seat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is it intended to dispose of the resolution this morning?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers the resolution, and the question is whether there is objection to its consideration at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Has the matter been considered by a committee?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it has not. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I feel that when the precedents which I am going to cite are read, every Senator here will be satisfied. Of course if they are not that might raise a different question. Personally, I have no desire to delay the matter.

Mr. President, I wish to say that the constitutionality of the appointment of Mr. BARBOUR is questioned in a recent decision of the District Court of Louisiana. There is cited in support of that decision the Dietrich case, tried in Nebraska, the court there sitting being Mr. Justice Van Devanter, now of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Dietrich case also cites a report from a committee of the House rendered in 1818. I read only a very few lines of that report to show the effect of it:

So, also, if a person duly qualified be elected and returned, and die before the organization of a House of Representatives, we do not think he could be said to have been a Member of that body, which had no existence until after his death.

That was the contested case of Samuel Herrick. The report of the committee was adopted by a close vote of 72 to 70, but as that precedent stands it means that a person elected to the United States Senate does not become a Member of the Senate until he accepts the office by taking the oath of office.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In order to get the Senator's view on this question I would like to ask if he does not think the case cited is different from one applying to the Senate, inasmuch as the Senate is a continuing body and the House of Representatives is not?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think there is a question about that, but with the permission of the Senate, I will make a brief statement and after I have concluded it, if there are any questions to be propounded which I am able to answer, I shall be glad to do so.

I want first to call attention to the fact that we have constantly acted on the theory that a Senator is a Member of the Senate from the date of the commencement of his term for a period of six years, and that although he presented himself subsequently, whether a day later or a year later, if his credentials were accepted at that time, it related back to the beginning of his term. There are acts which a Senator may perform from the very beginning of his term until the next session of Congress when he takes the oath of office.

The District Court of the State of Louisiana has just rendered a decision which, if followed by the United States Senate, would, in my opinion, impel the Senate to declare that the appointment of Mr. BARBOUR as a Member of the United States Senate from the State of New Jersey is void. I do not agree with the decision nor with the opinion of the court. The court, however, in sustaining his decision has quoted from the decisions and opinions of other courts and from the precedents established in the Senate and House of Representatives.

By reason of the dignity that attaches to the court, and what appears to me to be a misconception not only of the decisions cited but the precedents of the Senate and House of Representatives, I feel that it is a matter that may not be ignored. The question is now at issue before the United States Senate.

The court of Louisiana holds that a duly elected candidate for the United States Senate does not become a Member of the Senate until he has subscribed to the oath of office prescribed for United States Senator. If this be the law, then it is evident that the late Dwight W. Morrow never became a Member of the United States Senate for his term commencing on March 4, 1931, for the reason that subsequent to his election and prior to his death he did not subscribe to the oath of office of United States Senator.

Without question Senator Morrow was duly elected as a United States Senator from the State of New Jersey for a term of six years commencing March 4, 1931. If he became a Member of the United States Senate on March 4, 1931, by virtue of such election and prior to taking the oath of office, then a vacancy was created by his death which, under the Constitution and the laws of New Jersey, entitled the governor to fill such vacancy by appointment. On the other hand, if under the Constitution Senator Morrow could not become a Member of the United States Senate until he took the oath of office, then he died without being a United States Senator for the term for which he was elected and no vacancy occurred which could be filled by appointment. Of course, as each State is entitled to two Senators, the vacancy in representation of the State of New Jersey could be filled by an election even though Dwight W. Morrow was not a United States Senator at the time that he died, but not by appointment.

The power of a chief executive to make a temporary appointment of a Member of the United States Senate is granted in the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, clause 2, which reads as follows:

When vacancies happen in the represenation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This clause of the Constitution does not change or modify the method of the election of United States Senators as provided under the first clause of the seventeenth amendment. It anticipates that a representative of the State who has been duly elected has vacated his office, and that temporarily to fill such vacancy in representation the governor may appoint until the State may fill its quota of representation by election. It follows, therefore, that if Dwight W. Morrow was not a representative in the United States Senate of the State of New Jersey at the time his office was vacated by death, then the power of the governor to make the temporary appointment has not come into effect under the constitutional provision.

If the transmission of a commission be not considered as necessary to give validity to an appointment, still less is its acceptance. The appointment is the sole act of the President; the acceptance is the sole act of the officer, and is, in plain common sense, posterior to the appointment. As he may resign, so may he refuse to accept; but neither the one nor the other is capable of rendering the appointment a nonentity.

That this is the understanding of the Government is apparent from the whole tenor of its conduct.

A commission bears date, and the salary of the officer commences from his appointment, not from the transmission or acceptance of his commission. When a person appointed to any office refuses to accept that office, the successor is nominated in the place of the person who has declined to accept, and not in the place of the person who had been previously in office and had created the original vacancy.

It is, therefore, decidedly the opinion of the court that when a commission has been signed by the President the appointment is made; and that the commission is complete when the seal of the United States has been affixed to it by the Secretary of State.

The reasoning of Chief Justice Marshall is applicable to the determination of the question as to when a United States Senator becomes a Member of the Senate.

Senator Morrow's certificate of election for the term beginning March 4, 1931, was issued to him by the chief executive of the State of New Jersey. Every constitutional act required of the State of New Jersey under the Constitution was consummated. Senator Morrow did not decline the office, and his acceptance of the certificate of election and credentials from the chief executive of his State constituted an acceptance of the office. If the contention of the court of Louisiana is correct that Senator Morrow could not become a Member of the United States Senate until he took the oath of office, then he would be deprived of the office to which he had been elected, and the salary and powers and perquisites of such office, from the date of the beginning of his term on March 4, 1931, until December 7, 1931, and the State would be deprived during such period of its equal representation in the United States Senate. This would be by reason of no default on the part of the State of New Jersey or of Senator Morrow, but solely because the United States Senate during such period was not in session and therefore no oath of office could be administered.

As was stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Barry v. U. S. ex rel. Cunningham (279 U. S. 597, 615):

When a candidate is elected to either House, he, of course, is elected a Member of the body.

Again, in Conway v. United States (1 Ct. Cl. 68), the court said:

When a State, already in the Union, elects a Representative, the person elected has therefrom a vested right of membership and the action of Congress passing upon his election only ascertains the right vested by and from the election.

James Shields was denied a seat in the United States Senate in 1849 under the following resolution:

Resolved, That the election of James Shields to be a Senator of the United States was void, he not having been a citizen of the United States for the term of years required as a qualification to be a Senator of the United States at the commencement of the term for which he was elected.

Shields was naturalized on October 21, 1840. According to Article I, section 3, clause 3 of the United States Constitution:

No person shall be a Senator who shall not have * * * been nine years a citizen of the United States.

It will be noted that the Senate in the resolution fixed the date when Shields would become a Member of the Senate as the date of the commencement of the term for which he was elected. If, under the Constitution, Shields would not have become a Member of the Senate until he took the oath of office, he could have waited until October 21, 1849, and the objection that he had not been a citizen of the United States for nine years before becoming a Senator would not have been tenable.

The Senate and the House of Representatives, since the first organization of the Congress under the Constitution, have by their every recorded act recognized Senators and Representatives of their respective bodies from the date of the beginning of the term for which they were elected or appointed. Their right to receive and be paid their salaries, to have offices and other facilities provided for them, to enjoy the perquisites of the office, and to represent their States as United States Senators and Representatives from the beginning of their term of office until such office was vacated, either by voluntary or involuntary action, has always been recognized. If such action on behalf of the Senate and House of Representatives has been unconstitutional, then our Government has illegally expended upon Senators and Representatives, in salaries and otherwise, large sums of money.

The Constitution provides that—

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

In accordance with the requirements of the Constitution the newly elected Congress met in March, 1789. At the time Congress was assembled there was no provision for the administering of an oath of office; in fact the act prescribing the oath of office did not become a law until Wednesday, June 3, 1789.

Now let us see whether the first Congress of the United States considered they were Members of Congress prior to the taking of an oath of office. It is interesting to read from the Journal of the Senate relative to its first organization. The first Journal entry reads as follows:

WEDNESDAY, March 4, 1789.

This being the day for the meeting of the new Congress, the following Members of the Senate appeared and took their seats:

The Members present not being a quorum, they adjourned from day to day until * * * Monday, April 6.

Richard Henry Lee, from Virginia, then appearing, "took his seat, and formed a quorum of the whole Senators of the United States."

The credentials of the Members present being read and ordered to be filed, the Senate proceeded, by ballot, to the choice of a President for the sole purpose of opening and counting the votes for President of the United States.

John Langdon was elected.

It will be noted that John Langdon, in accordance with Article I, section 3, clause 5, of the Constitution, was elected by the Members of the Senate, to whom no oath of office had been administered.

On April 6, 1789, the House of Representatives was informed that a quorum of the Senate was formed and that a President had been elected for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the electors of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice President of the United States.

Referring again to the Journal of the Senate in its early days we find this entry in the Journal of April 6, 1789:

The Speaker and the House of Representatives attended in the Senate Chamber.

Then follows the tabulation of the vote. And the Journal continues:

Whereby it appeared that George Washington, Esq., was elected President, and John Adams, Esq., Vice President of the United States of America.

And then we gather the following facts from the Senate Journal:

A rules committee was appointed on April 7.

A Secretary of the Senate was elected April 8.

The Committee on Rules reported on April 13.

On April 15, the joint rules were reported by the committee.

On April 16, the rules were agreed to.

On April 18, the move of conference with the House was concurred in.

On April 21, Mr. Langdon, the President pro tempore, conducted the Vice President to the chair.

On April 25, the committee on providing for the President taking the oath reported.

I wish to call attention to the fact that all of this until April 25 had been done through a President pro tempore of the Senate, who had taken no oath of office and who had been elected by Senators who had taken no oath of office, nor was the Vice President administered any oath of office.

The Constitution does provide that the President—

Before he enter on the execution of his office, he shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

As to Senators and Representatives, the Constitution provides:

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution.

It will be observed that the Constitution provides that the President shall take the oath "before he enter on the execution of his office." No such qualification is imposed under the Constitution upon Senators and Representatives. As to the President, the wording of the oath was set forth in the Constitution. As to Senators, its definition was left to congressional enactment.

It was not until Monday, June 1, 1789, that the oath to be administered to the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, and other officers was provided for by law. And yet, prior to June 1, 1789, the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, prior to taking the oath of office, entered upon their legislative duties and enacted a tariff bill.

It was not until June 3, 1789, that the oath of office was administered by Mr. Langdon to the Vice President, and by the Vice President to the Members of the Senate and the Secretary. It will be noted that Mr. Langdon, the President pro tempore, administered the oath of office to the Vice President before he, Mr. Langdon, had taken the oath of office himself.

It is evident that if Senators elect do not become Members of the United States Senate until they have taken the oath of office, then the tabulation of the votes of the electors of the several States in the matter of a choice of a President and Vice President of the United States was without authority of the Constitution and void.

It is evident, therefore, that the constitutional provision requiring an oath of office on the part of United States Senators was the imposition of a duty and not a qualification of membership. A Member of the Senate might be expelled for refusing to take the oath of office or to perform his duties as United States Senator.

As was said by Senator Trumbull in discussing the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution:

The oath does not go to the qualification, but to the discharge of the duties subsequently. (Congressional Globe, 1865–66, vol. 4, p. 2901.)

Senator Crittenden, of Kentucky, in a debate on the floor of the Senate in 1858, declared:

I am as much a Senator before I take the oath as I am afterwards. It contributes nothing to make me a Senator. If I fail to take the oath and presume to act without it, I am guilty of an offense; but I am a Senator before.

If it were determined that a Member of the House of Representatives became a Member only after taking his oath of office, it would seem almost impossible to organize the House of Representatives. The Constitution provides:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

The Constitution further states: "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers."

From the first organization of the House of Representatives, upon ascertaining that a quorum of the Members was present, the body has proceeded to the election of their Speaker and other officers. This is the first constitutional act of organization. As the law requires the Speaker to administer the oath of office to the Members, the Members must elect a Speaker before they take the oath of office. So the only possible process is that which is followed. In every case the Speaker, after his election, is administered the oath of office by some unsworn Member of the House of Representatives.

The Constitution provides that—

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business.

Each House, from the first organization of Congress to the present time, has by its every act held that its Members become Members upon the beginning of the term for which they were elected and that the oath of office prescribed is not a qualification to membership.

The District Court of Louisiana, in the decision and opinion referred to, states—

I call particular attention to this statement of the opinion of that court, because it lays the whole onus of the court's misconstruction of the Constitution upon the Congress of the United States. The court says:

If we were left free to decide this case upon the constitutional provisions, and the contemporaneous debates thereon, we would decide this case in favor of relator.

The Congress of the United States being the sole and exclusive arbiter of the qualifications of its Members, any decision by that court should be binding on this court, a mere trial court. Likewise, any decision by a Federal court, while not binding on this court, is at least persuasive and entitled to some weight.

And then the court cites the decision to which I have referred, known as the Dietrich case. The particular phase of this case which is important here is reported in One hundred twenty-sixth Federal Reporter, commencing on page 676, and I will read part of it.

Let me call attention to the fact that that decision only collaterally had involved in it the question as to when a Senator becomes a Member of the Senate. It was a criminal case. Dietrich was indicted under our statute making it a crime for any Member of Congress to accept a bribe for the purpose of performing an official act. There would seem to be little doubt that the court admitted the facts for the purpose of the argument; but he found that Dietrich was not guilty because he found that Dietrich did not become a United States Senator at the beginning of his term, but several months later, at the first succeeding session of Congress when he presented his certificate and took the oath of office. The crime was committed during the term for which he was elected but before he took the oath of office, and the distinguished court held that he was not a United States Senator until he had accepted the office.

I think the proposition of law that a Senator is not a member until he accepts the office is correct. I do not think you can enforce on a United States Senator the office, and that has been held frequently; but to void his election he must decline the office or commit acts which are inconsistent with the holding of the office.

In Dietrich's case, as far as the court's opinion shows, Dietrich, when elected, accepted the certificate of his election. He accepted his credentials; and subsequently, at the first session of the Congress to which he was elected, he appeared here, presented his credentials, and was sworn in. The court said, however, that at any time between the date of his election and the date of presenting his certificate he might have resigned; or, in other words, he had not declared his acceptance of the office until he took the oath.

Of course the fallacy of the opinion lies in this: The Constitution of the United States guarantees to every State two representatives in the Senate at all times; and in order to make that representation continuous and certain the Constitution gave United States Senators a term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March. On the 4th day of March one Senator goes out, and instantly another Senator from the State goes in.

I say that the presumption conclusively arises that if a man offers himself before the people of his State as a candidate for election to the United States Senate to represent them for a 6-year term commencing on March 4, and thereafter is elected, receives from the proper executive of his State a certificate that he is elected, accepts the credentials that have to be presented to the United States Senate as evidence of his election, and thereafter says no word and commits no act indicative of his refusal to accept the office, there is a conclusive presumption that during that period of time he has accepted it. I contend that the freeing of this man under such a technical decision, when he afterwards became a Senator of the United States and was sworn in, should have no weight and effect.

May I call the attention of the Senate also to the fact that the court became extremely confused with regard to criminal statutes. Some of our criminal statutes state that a Senator elect is prohibited from doing certain acts. Some of them state that a Senator is prohibited from doing certain acts. In other words, we have various degrees of expression in criminal statutes relative to Senators and Representatives; but, in my opinion, the most flagrant error that the court made was this:

At the time Dietrich was elected he was Governor of the State of Nebraska. He held that office for two months after he was elected Senator. The court says that holding the office of governor and holding the office of United States Senator at the same time are incompatible with and contrary to the Constitution of the United States, and quotes the provision of the Constitution on the subject. The court says:

> This is the position which has been uniformly taken by the House of Representatives under that provision of the Constitution, Article I, paragraph 6, which declares:
> "No person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office."

The language is, "No person holding any office under the United States." It does not say, "No person holding any office under a State." There is no provision, to my knowledge, in the Constitution or in any Federal statute which prohibits a United States Senator from holding the office of governor of a State—none whatever. The Constitution only states that a person can not hold an office under the United States Government at the same time that he holds the office of Representative in Congress or United States Senator.

I am frank to confess that this whole decision is rested on the proposition that Dietrich did not become a United States Senator at the beginning of his term, did not become a United States Senator until he was sworn in, and that the crime committed between the beginning of his term and the time he actually took his seat in this body was not committed as a United States Senator.

If we wish to adopt that decision; if we wish to hold that after a man has been elected to the Senate for a certain term, and has accepted his credentials, and has not the opportunity to take the oath because Congress is not in session, he is not a Senator during that period of time, then we must hold that Dwight W. Morrow, although he was duly elected, although he was delivered and received his commission, was not a Senator at the time he died, because he died between the beginning of the term to which he was elected and to which the executive of his State had certified that he was elected as a Senator and yesterday, the 7th day of December, when we convened. If we hold that, then, under the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, we must hold that there was no vacancy, because there was no Senator filling the position from March until December, because any prior Senator's office expired on March 4; and the State would be in the anomalous position of having one Senator go out of this body on March 4 and the other, who had been elected to fill that position, not taking his office until December 7, 1931.

The court cites the Herrick case. I have just read from the Dietrich case. There are only two cases cited in the Louisiana decision—the Dietrich and Herrick cases. There is one cited in the Dietrich decision, and that is the Herrick case.

I am free to confess that the Herrick case, decided in the House in 1818 by a divided vote of 72 to 74, is contrary to the position I have taken, although, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, there are different situations with regard to the House and Senate.

Here is the situation with regard to this matter. Herrick was a United States district attorney in a district in Ohio. We admit that under the Constitution a United States Senator or Representative could not hold the office of United States district attorney and United States Senator at the same time, because the Constitution forbids a United States Senator from holding any other office under the United States Government.

Herrick did not resign his office as United States district attorney when his term of office as Representative began. He remained as United States district attorney after the term for which he was elected began, but there was no session of Congress during the time he so held that office after his election. When Congress did convene, however, he came before the House, having resigned as district attorney, and presented his credentials and asked to be admitted as a Member. His case was referred to a committee. The case is known as Hammond against Herrick. Hammond contended that at the time the term of office of Herrick began he was United States district attorney, still held the office, and that therefore it constituted an abandonment of his election as a Member of the House of Representatives, as under the Constitution membership in the House is incompatible with the holding of any other office under the United States Government. The case was referred to the Committee on Elections, and finally, by a vote of 72 to 70, the House of Representatives held that Herrick was entitled to his seat; that the fact that he held this incompatible office after his term began but had resigned it before he entered on his duties in the House did not prevent him from holding his seat in the House.

The only ground upon which they could so find was that the constitutional provision does not in itself state that one holding an office under the United States Government may not be elected as a Member of Congress but provides that he can not hold at the same time the office of a Representative in Congress or in the United States Senate while he holds another office under the United States Government.

Whether they meant that or not I do not know; the decision is not plain enough to determine. But what I wish to say to the Senate is that while that decision was adopted in the House in 1818 or 1819 by a divided vote of 72 to 70, it has never since been quoted in any debate or in any precedent by the House of Representatives or the United States Senate. It is totally inconsistent with the constitutional protection of the representation of a State in the United States Senate, under which a State is entitled always to two representatives in the United States Senate, to say that the term of office, through no fault of the Senator himself or of a State, can not commence to run until the Senate of the United States sees fit to administer the Senators elect the oath. That is inconsistent with our whole form of government. The stand taken by Senator Trumbull and by Senator Crittenden, of Kentucky, that it is not a qualification but is a requirement that may be enforced as any other duty is more in consonance with the provision of the Constitution relative the representation of States in the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Suppose a Senator elect should decline to subscribe to the oath required by law?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think in that event, sir, it would be the duty of the Senate immediately to expel him for refusing to comply with the requirements of the statutes of the United States, as it would be their duty to expel him if he openly refused to comply with other provisions of law relative the duties of a Senator.

Under the Constitution a Senator's term of office is for six years. It begins on the 4th of March and expires on the 4th of March. He does not hold over until his successor is qualified by taking the oath of office, if such were required as a qualification. Senators have other duties to perform besides legislative duties.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I have just read the resolution the Senator introduced, having entered the Chamber late. It is not quite clear to me exactly what the Senator is contending for. Does the Senator contend that a Senator elect is not a Senator until he takes the oath of office?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I do not; I contend the opposite. I contend that he becomes a Member of the Senate upon the beginning of the term for which he was elected.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator contends the opposite, why is it necessary to have the resolution?

Mr. PITTMAN. The only reason for having the resolution at all is that we not only have a recent decision from Louisiana but we have a very reputable decision in the Dietrich case from the United States District Court in Nebraska, presided over by a judge who is now an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He argues, in his opinion, strongly that until a Senator is sworn in he is not a Senator from the State which chose him; that although being elected to serve his State as a United States Senator for a certain term—that is, from March 4—when his predecessor goes out, there is a vacancy in the Senate from that State until the first Monday in December, when an oath of office may be administered, unless there is a special session.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course the Senator is familiar with the fact that the law makes two distinct crimes—one for a man who is a United States Senator and one for a man who does the same thing between the time he is elected to the Senate and the time he takes the oath of office.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Those are distinct acts, showing that Congress recognized that there is a question as to when a man actually becomes a Senator. This resolution, as a matter of fact, would be overriding laws previously passed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. PITTMAN. The only distinctions in the acts I have found are these: There are acts which make it a crime for a Senator, after election, to do certain things. There are other statutes which make it a crime for a Member of the Senate or of the House to do certain things. But none of those statutes attempts to define when a person is a Member of the Senate or House. That is what I am getting at. The court in the Dietrich case attempted to determine when a person becomes a Member of the Senate or of the House. I contend that if we sit idly by and stand by the decision in the Dietrich case we find ourselves in the position of saying that on the 4th of March one Senator retires, while his successor, who is supposed to go in on the same 4th of March, can not take office until the Senate convenes the following December, because it is impossible for him to take an oath of office until the Senate convenes.

As I was saying, there are other duties besides legislative duties which a Senator may perform. He represents his State in United States Government matters. He is entitled to an office the minute his term of office begins. He is entitled to the perquisites of a United States Senator. He is entitled to a secretary; he is entitled to whatever clerks are allotted to a United States Senator. He is prohibited, during that period of time, from violating the duties of a United States Senator, but the opposite was held in this one decision here. The court says to the Senate in that decision that if Senator Morrow had come here on the 4th of March and asked for his office as a Senator, the Senate would have said, "You are not a United States Senator; you can not have the office." If he had asked for the establishment of a telephone, they would have told him the same thing. If he had undertaken to send out under frank to his constituents year books and other literature, they would have said, "You are not a United States Senator." If he had appeared before any body to represent the position of his State, they would have said, "You are not a United States Senator, because you can not be until December, when you are sworn in."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada whether he has considered the effect of his resolution upon the authority, jealously guarded by the Senate, to ask a Senator elect to stand aside when he presents himself to take the oath of office?

Mr. PITTMAN. That matter has been decided by the Supreme Court. That court recently, in an opinion rendered by Chief Justice Hughes, passed on that very question. They said that a Senator became a Member of the Senate when he was elected, but that when he presented his certificate to the United States Senate, the Senate had the right to determine the one question, as to whether he had been duly and constitutionally elected, and they could determine that question before receiving his certificate or after receiving his certificate. That was their ruling on that matter, that the only question was whether or not he was duly and constitutionally elected, and that if the Senate had proof before it at the time he presented his certificate, as in the case from Illinois, then the Senate had just as much right to determine the legality of his election before seating him as it would have afterwards.

I read from the decision:

> When a candidate is elected to either House, he, of course, is elected a Member of the body; and when that body determines, upon presentation of his credentials, without first giving him his seat, that the election is void, there would seem to be no real substance in the claim that the election of a "Member" had not been adjudged. To hold otherwise would be to interpret the word "Member" with a strictness in no way required by the obvious purpose of the constitutional provision, or necessary to its effective enforcement in accordance with such purpose, which, so far as the present case is concerned, was to vest the Senate with authority to exclude persons asserting membership, who either had not been elected or, what amounts to the same thing, had been elected by resort to fraud, bribery, corruption, or other sinister methods having the effect of vitiating the election. * * * (p. 616). The temporary deprivation of equal representation which results from the refusal of the Senate to seat a Member pending the inquiry as to his election or qualifications is the necessary consequence of the exercise of a constitutional power, and no more deprives the State of its "equal suffrage" in the constitutional sense than would a vote of the Senate vacating the seat of a sitting Member or a vote of expulsion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us suppose the Senate passed this resolution. In the Louisiana case we have a situation where a Senator was elected last year and, as I understand, is saying to the people that he will serve out his term of office as governor before he begins his term as United States Senator. His term of office as governor ends in March next, I believe. If the resolution should pass and this particular individual should not come here and take the oath until he has completed his term as governor, could the question then be raised and the Senate, following these precedents, prevent him from taking his oath of office?

Mr. PITTMAN. My reading of the decisions of the courts confirms my opinion that the Senate can do what it please. The Senate, as suggested in the Dietrich case, if it saw fit, could refuse him his seat on the ground that he has already declined to become a United States Senator. The constitutional provision is that the Senate is the sole judge of the election and qualifications of its Members. The matter now before us has not anything to do with the Senator elect from Louisiana, if I may say so. There is nothing incompatible, as I said before, under the Constitution or the laws of the United States, in a Senator holding at the same time the office of United States Senator and that of governor of a State. The governor is holding his office in Louisiana and yet he is a Senator of the United States, but there is nothing that the United States Senate can question about his holding the office of governor at the same time. It is not incompatible with holding the office of United States Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I asked the Senator is that I am perfectly willing to have the Senator elect from New Jersey take the oath of office, but I do not want something we do now coming back to confront me in the future because I voted to establish as a precedent which might be used when some other Senator comes here in 30 or 60 days to take the oath of office. If I thought it had any bearing in the world or might be construed against the new Senator from Louisiana taking his seat, I would vote against the resolution. I merely want to clarify it to that extent. I believe there are other Senators in the same position.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have been asked by a number of Senators to inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether there would be any objection on his part, at the conclusion of his remarks, to a reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary for its consideration and report, particularly in view of the first paragraph of the resolution which undertakes to construe the Constitution. The Senator has made a statement that is quite impressive and forceful. I have been asked to inquire whether or not it would be objectionable to him to have that course pursued.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I stated in the beginning, and as I have assured those who are interested, I have no desire intentionally to attempt to delay the taking of his seat by the Senator appointed from New Jersey. Therefore I am going to request that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and that the Senator elect from New Jersey may be permitted to present himself and take the oath.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Nevada resumes his seat I want to ask him whether, if he takes that course, we are not then facing a situation involving simply a moot question and ought we to pursue that course? He is proposing to refer something to the Judiciary Committee which has not any application to an actual pending case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would invite the Senator's attention to the fact that we frequently swear in Senators elect when they present their credentials and afterwards decide that they are not entitled to their seats.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not going to make any objection to the Senator appointed from New Jersey taking the oath and taking his seat. I am not raising any question of that kind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand. I thought that the Senator meant that if he is now sworn in the Senate would be concluded in the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; I do not say that. But why present to the Judiciary Committee a question for them to consider and report upon when it is simply a moot question? There is no action to be taken afterwards by the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It does not follow at all that there would be no action taken by the Senate. If the Senate Judiciary Committee should report that one who is apparently duly elected and whose term does not begin until he takes the oath of office is not qualified, then the question would arise whether the Senator appointed from New Jersey would be entitled to retain his seat. That is the very question.

Mr. NORRIS. If we take that view of it, his credentials, together with the resolution, ought to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as any such contested matter would be referred.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me it would be more appropriate to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I made the suggestion that it go to the Committee on the Judiciary because it is purely a question of law that is involved. The resolution involves no question of fact. It does involve a question of law, and therefore I think it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Should it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and should the committee report against the contention made by the Senator from Nevada and in apparent conformity to the decision of the House of Representatives, the decision of the District Court for the State of Louisiana and the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska, all of which appear to be contrary to that contention, the matter would then go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There being no objection, as I have understood, to the Senator appointed from New Jersey subscribing to the required oath, and there being no contest pending touching the question of his right so to do and to enter upon the discharge of his duties here, I have not, of course, suggested that the matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I heartily concur in the suggestion that it be referred for the purposes stated to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have already requested, on the suggestion of Senators, that the resolution which I have offered be amended by striking out the last resolve——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may modify his resolution as he wishes.

Mr. PITTMAN. And that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO SENATORS FROM ARKANSAS AND NEW JERSEY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senators designate will present themselves at the Vice President's desk to receive the oath of office.

Mrs. CARAWAY, escorted by Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and Mr. BARBOUR, escorted by Mr. KEAN, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WATSON and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas advanced in the center aisle, and

Mr. WATSON said: Mr. President, the joint committee of the House and Senate appointed to notify the President that the two Houses have organized and to inquire whether or not he has any communication to make to the Congress have performed their duty and have been informed by the President that to-day he would transmit to both Houses a message in writing.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE

Mr. Latta, one of the secretaries of the President, was announced and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received by the secretary to the majority (C. A. Loeffler) and handed to the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

It is my duty under the Constitution to transmit to the Congress information on the state of the Union and to recommend for its consideration necessary and expedient measures.

The chief influence affecting the state of the Union during the past year has been the continued world-wide economic disturbance. Our national concern has been to meet the emergencies it has created for us and to lay the foundations for recovery.

If we lift our vision beyond these immediate emergencies, we find fundamental national gains even amid depression. In meeting the problem of this difficult period, we have witnessed a remarkable development of the sense of cooperation in the community. For the first time in the history of our major economic depressions there has been a notable absence of public disorders and industrial conflict. Above all there is an enlargement of social and spiritual responsibility among the people. The strains and stresses upon business have resulted in closer application, in saner policies, and in better methods. Public improvements have been carried out on a larger scale than even in normal times. The country is richer in physical property, in newly discovered resources, and in productive capacity than ever before. There has been constant gain in knowledge and education; there has been continuous advance in science and invention; there has been distinct gain in public health. Business depressions have been recurrent in the life of our country and are but transitory. The Nation has emerged from each of them with increased strength and virility, because of the enlightenment they have brought, the readjustments and the larger understanding of the realities and obligations of life and work which come from them.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Both our Army and Navy have been maintained in a high state of efficiency. The ability and devotion of both officers and men sustain the highest traditions of the service. Reductions and postponements in expenditure of these departments to meet the present emergency are being made without reducing existing personnel or impairing the morale of either establishment.

The agreement between the leading naval powers for limitation of naval armaments and establishment of their relative strength and thus elimination of competitive building also implies for ourselves the gradual expansion of the deficient categories in our Navy to the parities provided in those treaties. However, none of the other nations, parties to these agreements, is to-day maintaining the full rate of construction which the treaty size of fleets would imply.

Although these agreements secured the maximum reduction of fleets which it was at that time possible to attain, I am hopeful that the naval powers, party to these agreements, will realize that establishment of relative strength in itself offers opportunity for further reduction without injury to any of them. This would be the more possible if pending negotiations are successful between France and Italy. If the world is to regain its standards of life, it must further decrease both naval and other arms. The subject will come before the General Disarmament Conference which meets in Geneva on February 2 next.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

We are at peace with the world. We have cooperated with other nations to preserve peace. The rights of our citizens abroad have been protected.

The economic depression has continued and deepened in every part of the world during the past year. In many countries political instability, excessive armaments, debts, governmental expenditures, and taxes have resulted in revolutions, in unbalanced budgets and monetary collapse and financial panics, in dumping of goods upon world markets, and in diminished consumption of commodities.

Within two years there have been revolutions or acute social disorders in 19 countries, embracing more than half the population of the world. Ten countries have been unable to meet their external obligations. In 14 countries, embracing a quarter of the world's population, former monetary standards have been temporarily abandoned. In a number of countries there have been acute financial panics or compulsory restraints upon banking. These disturbances have many roots in the dislocations from the World War. Every one of them has reacted upon us. They have sharply affected the markets and prices of our agricultural and industrial products. They have increased unemployment and greatly embarrassed our financial and credit system.

As our difficulties during the past year have plainly originated in large degree from these sources, any effort to bring about our own recuperation has dictated the necessity of cooperation by us with other nations in reasonable effort to restore world confidence and economic stability.

Cooperation of our Federal reserve system and our banks with the central banks in foreign countries has contributed to localize and ameliorate a number of serious financial crises or moderate the pressures upon us and thus avert disasters which would have affected us.

The economic crisis in Germany and Central Europe last June rose to the dimensions of a general panic from which it was apparent that without assistance these nations must collapse. Apprehensions of such collapse had demoralized our agricultural and security markets and so threatened other nations as to impose further dangers upon us. But of highest importance was the necessity of cooperation on our part to relieve the people of Germany from imminent disasters and to maintain their important relations to progress and stability in the world. Upon the initiative of this Government a year's postponement of reparations and other intergovernmental debts was brought about. Upon our further initiative an agreement was made by Germany's private creditors providing for an extension of such credits until the German people can develop more permanent and definite forms of relief.

We have continued our policy of withdrawing our marines from Haiti and Nicaragua.

The difficulties between China and Japan have given us great concern, not alone for the maintenance of the spirit of the Kellogg-Briand pact, but for the maintenance of the treaties to which we are a party assuring the territorial integrity of China. It is our purpose to assist in finding solutions sustaining the full spirit of those treaties.

I shall deal at greater length with our foreign relations in a later message.

THE DOMESTIC SITUATION

Many undertakings have been organized and forwarded during the past year to meet the new and changing emergencies which have constantly confronted us.

Broadly the community has cooperated to meet the needs of honest distress, and to take such emergency measures as would sustain confidence in our financial system and would cushion the violence of liquidation in industry and commerce, thus giving time for orderly readjustment of costs, inventories, and credits without panic and widespread bankruptcy. These measures have served those purposes and will promote recovery.

In these measures we have striven to mobilize and stimulate private initiative and local and community responsibility. There has been the least possible Government entry into the economic field, and that only in temporary and emergency form. Our citizens and our local governments have given a magnificent display of unity and action, initiative and patriotism in solving a multitude of difficulties and in cooperating with the Federal Government.

For a proper understanding of my recommendations to the Congress it is desirable very briefly to review such activities during the past year.

The emergencies of unemployment have been met by action in many directions. The appropriations for the continued speeding up of the great Federal construction program have provided direct and indirect aid to employment upon a large scale. By organized unity of action, the States and municipalities have also maintained large programs of public improvement. Many industries have been prevailed upon to anticipate and intensify construction. Industrial concerns and other employers have been organized to spread available work amongst all their employees, instead of discharging a portion of them. A large majority have maintained wages at as high levels as the safe conduct of their business would permit. This course has saved us from industrial conflict and disorder which have characterized all previous depressions. Immigration has been curtailed by administrative action. Upon the basis of normal immigration the decrease amounts to about 300,000 individuals who otherwise would have been added to our unemployment. The expansion of Federal employment agencies under appropriations by the Congress has proved most effective. Through the President's organization for unemployment relief, public and private agencies were successfully mobilized last winter to provide employment and other measures against distress. Similar organization gives assurance against suffering during the coming winter. Committees of leading citizens are now active at practically every point of unemployment. In the large majority they have been assured the funds necessary which, together with local government aids, will meet the situation. A few exceptional localities will be further organized. The evidence of the Public Health Service shows an actual decrease of sickness and infant and general mortality below normal years. No greater proof could be adduced that our people have been protected from hunger and cold and that the sense of social responsibility in the Nation has responded to the need of the unfortunate.

To meet the emergencies in agriculture the loans authorized by Congress for rehabilitation in the drought areas have enabled farmers to produce abundant crops in those districts. The Red Cross undertook and magnificently administered relief for over 2,500,000 drought sufferers last winter. It has undertaken this year to administer relief to 100,000 sufferers in the new drought area of certain Northwest States. The action of the Federal Farm Board in granting credits to farm cooperatives saved many of them from bankruptcy and increased their purpose and strength. By enabling farm cooperatives to cushion the fall in prices of farm products in 1930 and 1931 the board secured higher prices to the farmer than would have been obtained otherwise, although the benefits of this action were partially defeated by continued world overproduction. Incident to this action the failure of a large number of farmers and of country banks was averted which could quite possibly have spread into a major disaster. The banks in the South have cooperated with the Farm Board in creation of a pool for the better marketing of accumulated cotton. Growers have been materially assisted by this action. Constant effort has been made to reduce overproduction in relief of agriculture and to promote the foreign buying of agricultural products by sustaining economic stability abroad.

To meet our domestic emergencies in credit and banking arising from the reaction to acute crises abroad the National Credit Association was set up by the banks with resources of $500,000,000 to support sound banks against the frightened withdrawals and hoarding. It is giving aid to reopen solvent banks which have been closed. Federal officials have brought about many beneficial unions of banks and have employed other means which have prevented many bank closings. As a result of these measures the hoarding withdrawals which had risen to over $250,000,000 per week after the British crisis have substantially ceased.

FURTHER MEASURES

The major economic forces and weaknesses at home and abroad have now been exposed and can be appraised, and the time is ripe for forward action to expedite our recovery.

Although some of the causes of our depression are due to speculation, inflation of securities and real estate, unsound foreign investments, and mismanagement of financial institutions, yet our self-contained national economy, with its matchless strength and resources, would have enabled us to recover long since but for the continued dislocations, shocks, and setbacks from abroad.

Whatever the causes may be, the vast liquidation and readjustments which have taken place have left us with a large degree of credit paralysis, which, together with the situation in our railways and the conditions abroad, are now the outstanding obstacles to recuperation. If we can put our financial resources to work and can ameliorate the financial situation in the railways, I am confident we can make a large measure of recovery independent of the rest of the world. A strong America is the highest contribution to world stability.

One phase of the credit situation is indicated in the banks. During the past year banks representing 3 per cent of our total deposits have been closed. A large part of these failures have been caused by withdrawals for hoarding, as distinguished from the failures early in the depression where weakness due to mismanagement was the larger cause of failure. Despite their closing, many of them will pay in full. Although such withdrawals have practically ceased, yet $1,100,000,000 of currency was previously withdrawn which has still to return to circulation. This represents a large reduction of the ability of our banks to extend credit which would otherwise fertilize industry and agriculture. Furthermore, many of our bankers, in order to prepare themselves to meet possible withdrawals, have felt compelled to call in loans, to refuse new credits, and to realize upon securities, which in turn has demoralized the markets. The paralysis has been further augmented by the steady increase in recent years of the proportion of bank assets invested in long-term securities, such as mortgages and bonds. These securities tend to lose their liquidity in depression or temporarily to fall in value so that the ability of the banks to meet the shock of sudden withdrawal is greatly lessened and the restriction of all kinds of credit is thereby increased. The continuing credit paralysis has operated to accentuate the deflation and liquidation of commodities, real estate, and securities below any reasonable basis of values.

All of this tends to stifle business, especially the smaller units, and finally expresses itself in further depression of prices and values, in restriction on new enterprise, and in increased unemployment.

The situation largely arises from an unjustified lack of confidence. We have enormous volumes of idle money in the banks and in hoarding. We do not require more money or working capital—we need to put what we have to work.

The fundamental difficulties which have brought about financial strains in foreign countries do not exist in the United States. No external drain on our resources can threaten our position, because the balance of international payments is in our favor; we owe less to foreign countries than they owe to us; our industries are efficiently organized; our currency and bank deposits are protected by the greatest gold reserve in history.

Our first step toward recovery is to reestablish confidence and thus restore the flow of credit which is the very basis of our economic life. We must put some steel beams in the foundations of our credit structure. It is our duty to apply the full strength of our Government not only to the immediate phases, but to provide security against shocks and the repetition of the weaknesses which have been proven.

The recommendations which I here lay before the Congress are designed to meet these needs by strengthening financial, industrial, and agricultural life through the medium of our existing institutions, and thus to avoid the entry of the Government into competition with private business.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FINANCE

The first requirement of confidence and of economic recovery is financial stability of the United States Government. I shall deal with fiscal questions at greater length in the Budget message. But I must at this time call attention to the magnitude of the deficits which have developed and the resulting necessity for determined and courageous policies. These deficits arise in the main from the heavy decrease in tax receipts due to the depression and to the increase in expenditure on construction in aid to unemployment, aids to agriculture, and upon services to veterans.

During the fiscal year ending June 30 last we incurred a deficit of about $903,000,000, which included the statutory reduction of the debt and represented an increase of the national debt by $616,000,000. Of this, however, $153,000,000 is offset by increased cash balances.

In comparison with the fiscal year 1928 there is indicated a fall in Federal receipts for the present fiscal year amounting to $1,683,000,000, of which $1,034,000,000 is in individual and corporate income taxes alone. During this fiscal year there will be an increased expenditure, as compared to 1928, on veterans of $255,000,000, and an increased expenditure on construction work which may reach $520,000,000. Despite large economies in other directions, we have an indicated deficit, including the statutory retirement of the debt, of $2,123,000,000, and an indicated net debt increase of about $1,711,000,000.

The Budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next, after allowing for some increase of taxes under the present laws and after allowing for drastic reduction in expenditures, still indicates a deficit of $1,417,000,000. After offsetting the statutory debt retirements this would indicate an increase in the national debt for the fiscal year 1933 of about $921,000,000.

Several conclusions are inevitable. We must have insistent and determined reduction in Government expenses. We must face a temporary increase in taxes. Such increase should not cover the whole of these deficits or it will retard recovery. We must partially finance the deficit by borrowing. It is my view that the amount of taxation should be fixed so as to balance the Budget for 1933 except for the statutory debt retirement. Such Government receipts would assure the balance of the following year's Budget including debt retirement. It is my further view that the additional taxation should be imposed solely as an emergency measure terminating definitely two years from July 1 next. Such a basis will give confidence in the determination of the Government to stabilize its finance and will assure taxpayers of its temporary character. Even with increased taxation, the Government will reach the utmost safe limit of its borrowing capacity by the expenditures for which we are already obligated and the recommendations here proposed. To go further than these limits in either expenditures, taxes, or borrowing will destroy confidence, denude commerce and industry of its resources, jeopardize the financial system, and actually extend unemployment and demoralize agriculture rather than relieve it.

FEDERAL LAND BANKS

I recommend that the Congress authorize the subscription by the Treasury of further capital to the Federal land banks to be retired as provided in the original act, or when funds are available, and that repayments of such capital be treated as a fund available for further subscriptions in the same manner. It is urgent that the banks be supported so as to stabilize the market values of their bonds and thus secure capital for the farmers at low rates, that they may continue their services to agriculture and that they may meet the present situation with consideration to the farmers.

DEPOSITS IN CLOSED BANKS

A method should be devised to make available quickly to depositors some portion of their deposits in closed banks as the assets of such banks may warrant. Such provision would go far to relieve distress in a multitude of families, would stabilize values in many communities, and would liberate working capital to thousands of concerns. I recommend that measures be enacted promptly to accomplish these results, and I suggest that the Congress should consider the development of such a plan through the Federal reserve banks.

HOME-LOAN DISCOUNT BANK

I recommend the establishment of a system of home-loan discount banks as the necessary companion in our financial structure of the Federal reserve banks and our Federal land banks. Such action will relieve present distressing pressures against home and farm property owners. It will relieve pressures upon and give added strength to building and loan associations, savings banks, and deposit banks, engaged in extending such credits. Such action would further decentralize our credit structure. It would revive residential construction and employment. It would enable such loaning institutions more effectually to promote home ownership. I discussed this plan at some length in a statement made public November 14, last. This plan has been warmly indorsed by the recent National Conference upon Home Ownership and Housing, whose members were designated by the governors of the States and the groups interested.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

In order that the public may be absolutely assured and that the Government may be in position to meet any public necessity, I recommend that an emergency Reconstruction Corporation of the nature of the former War Finance Corporation should be established. It may not be necessary to use such an instrumentality very extensively. The very existence of such a bulwark will strengthen confidence. The Treasury should be authorized to subscribe a reasonable capital to it, and it should be given authority to issue its own debentures. It should be placed in liquidation at the end of two years. Its purpose is that by strengthening the weak spots to thus liberate the full strength of the Nation's resources. It should be in position to facilitate exports by American agencies; make advances to agricultural credit agencies where necessary to protect and aid the agricultural industry; to make temporary advances upon proper securities to established industries, railways, and financial institutions which can not otherwise secure credit, and where such advances will protect the credit structure and stimulate employment. Its functions would not overlap those of the National Credit Corporation.

FEDERAL RESERVE ELIGIBILITY

On October 6th I issued a statement that I should recommend to the Congress an extension during emergencies of the eligibility provisions of the Federal reserve act. This statement was approved by a representative gathering of the Members of both Houses of the Congress, including members of the appropriate committees. It was approved by the officials of the Treasury Department, and I understand such an extension has been approved by a majority of the governors of the Federal reserve banks. Nothing should be done which would lower the safeguards of the system.

The establishment of the mortgage-discount banks herein referred to will also contribute to further reserve strength in the banks without inflation.

BANKING LAWS

Our people have a right to a banking system in which their deposits shall be safeguarded and the flow of credit less subject to storms. The need of a sounder system is plainly shown by the extent of bank failures. I recommend the prompt improvement of the banking laws. Changed financial conditions and commercial practices must be met. The Congress should investigate the need for separation between different kinds of banking; an enlargement of branch banking under proper restrictions; and the methods by which enlarged membership in the Federal reserve system may be brought about.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS

The postal savings deposits have increased from about $200,000,000 to about $550,000,000 during the past year. This experience has raised important practical questions in relation to deposits and investments which should receive the attention of the Congress.

RAILWAYS

The railways present one of our immediate and pressing problems. They are and must remain the backbone of our transportation system. Their prosperity is interrelated with the prosperity of all industries. Their fundamental service in transportation, the volume of their employment, their buying power for supplies from other industries, the enormous investment in their securities, particularly their bonds, by insurance companies, savings banks, benevolent and other trusts, all reflect their partnership in the whole economic fabric. Through these institutions the railway bonds are in a large sense the investment of every family. The well-maintained and successful operation and the stability of railway finances are of primary importance to economic recovery. They should have more effective opportunity to reduce operating costs by proper consolidation. As their rates must be regulated in public interest, so also approximate regulation should be applied to competing services by some authority. The methods of their regulation should be revised. The Interstate Commerce Commission has made important and far-reaching recommendations upon the whole subject, which I commend to the early consideration of the Congress.

ANTITRUST LAWS

In my message of a year ago I commented on the necessity of congressional inquiry into the economic action of the antitrust laws. There is wide conviction that some change should be made especially in the procedure under these laws. I do not favor their repeal. Such action would open wide the door to price fixing, monopoly, and destruction of healthy competition. Particular attention should be given to the industries founded upon natural resources, especially where destructive competition produces great wastes of these resources and brings great hardships upon operators, employees, and the public. In recent years there has been continued demoralization in the bituminous coal, oil, and lumber industries. I again commend the matter to the consideration of the Congress.

UNEMPLOYMENT

As an aid to unemployment the Federal Government is engaged in the greatest program of public-building, harbor, flood-control, highway, waterway, aviation, merchant and naval ship construction in all history. Our expenditures on these works during this calendar year will reach about $780,000,000 compared with $260,000,000 in 1928. Through this increased construction, through the maintenance of a full complement of Federal employees, and through services to veterans it is estimated that the Federal taxpayer is now directly contributing to the livelihood of 10,000,000 of our citizens.

We must avoid burdens upon the Government which will create more unemployment in private industry than can be gained by further expansion of employment by the Federal Government. We can now stimulate employment and agriculture more effectually and speedily through the voluntary measures in progress, through the thawing out of credit, through the building up of stability abroad, through the home-loan discount banks, through an emergency finance corporation and the rehabilitation of the railways and other such directions.

I am opposed to any direct or indirect Government dole. The breakdown and increased unemployment in Europe is due in part to such practices. Our people are providing against distress from unemployment in true American fashion by magnificent response to public appeal and by action of the local governments.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

There are many other subjects requiring legislative action at this session of the Congress. I may list the following among them:

VETERANS' SERVICES

The law enacted last March authorizing loans of 50 per cent upon adjusted-service certificates has, together with the loans made under previous laws, resulted in payment of about $1,260,000,000. Appropriations have been exhausted. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs advises that a further appropriation of $200,000,000 is required at once to meet the obligations made necessary by existing legislation.

There will be demands for further veterans' legislation; there are inequalities in our system of veterans' relief; it is our national duty to meet our obligations to those who have served the Nation. But our present expenditure upon these services now exceeds $1,000,000,000 per annum. I am opposed to any extension of these expenditures until the country has recovered from the present situation.

ELECTRICAL-POWER REGULATION

I have recommended in previous messages the effective regulation of interstate electrical power as the essential function of the reorganized Federal Power Commission. I renew the recommendation. It is urgently needed in public protection.

MUSCLE SHOALS

At my suggestion, the Governors and Legislatures of Alabama and Tennessee selected three members each for service on a committee to which I appointed a representative of the farm organizations and two representatives of the War Department for the purpose of recommending a plan for the disposal of these properties which would be in the interest of the people of those States and the agricultural industry throughout the country. I shall transmit the recommendations to the Congress.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS

I have referred in previous messages to the profound need of further reorganization and consolidation of Federal administrative functions to eliminate overlap and waste, and to enable coordination and definition of Government policies now wholly impossible in scattered and conflicting agencies which deal with parts of the same major function. I shall lay before the Congress further recommendations upon this subject, particularly in relation to the Department of the Interior. There are two directions of such reorganization, however, which have an important bearing upon the emergency problems with which we are confronted.

SHIPPING BOARD

At present the Shipping Board exercises large administrative functions independent of the Executive. These administrative functions should be transferred to the Department of Commerce, in keeping with that single responsibility which has been the basis of our governmental structure since its foundation. There should be created in that department a position of Assistant Secretary for Merchant Marine, under whom this work and the several bureaus having to do with merchant marine may be grouped.

The Shipping Board should be made a regulatory body acting also in advisory capacity on loans and policies, in keeping with its original conception. Its regulatory powers should be amended to include regulation of coastwise shipping so as to assure stability and better service. It is also worthy of consideration that the regulation of rates and services upon the inland waterways should be assigned to such a reorganized board.

REORGANIZATION OF PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

I recommend that all building and construction activities of the Government now carried on by many departments be consolidated into an independent establishment under the President to be known as the "Public Works Administration" directed by a Public Works Administrator. This agency should undertake all construction work in service to the different departments of the Government (except naval and military work). The services of the Corps of Army Engineers should be delegated in rotation for military duty to this administration in continuation of their supervision of river and harbor work. Great economies, sounder policies, more effective coordination to employment, and expedition in all construction work would result from this consolidation.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

I shall present some recommendations in a special message looking to the strengthening of criminal-law enforcement and improvement in judicial procedure connected therewith.

INLAND WATERWAY AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENT

These improvements are now proceeding upon an unprecedented scale. Some indication of the volume of work in progress is conveyed by the fact that during the current year over 380,000,000 cubic yards of material have been moved—an amount equal to the entire removal in the construction of the Panama Canal. The Mississippi waterway system, connecting Chicago, Kansas City, Pittsburgh, and New Orleans, will be in full operation during 1933. Substantial progress is being made upon the projects of the upper Missouri, upper Mississippi, etc.

Negotiations are now in progress with Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway.

THE TARIFF

Wages and standards of living abroad have been materially lowered during the past year. The temporary abandonment of the gold standard by certain countries has also reduced their production costs compared to ours. Fortunately any increases in the tariff which may be necessary to protect agriculture and industry from these lowered foreign costs, or decreases in items which may prove to be excessive, may be undertaken at any time by the Tariff Commission under authority which it possesses by virtue of the tariff act of 1930. The commission during the past year has reviewed the rates upon over 254 items subject to tariff. As a result of vigorous and industrious action, it is up to date in the consideration of pending references and is prepared to give prompt attention to any further applications. This procedure presents an orderly method for correcting inequalities. I am opposed to any general congressional revision of the tariff. Such action would disturb industry, business, and agriculture. It would prolong the depression.

IMMIGRATION AND DEPORTATION

I recommend that immigration restriction now in force under administrative action be placed upon a more definite basis by law. The deportation laws should be strengthened. Aliens lawfully in the country should be protected by the issuance of a certificate of residence.

PUBLIC HEALTH

I again call attention to my previous recommendations upon this subject, particularly in its relation to children. The moral results are of the utmost importance.

CONCLUSION

It is inevitable that in these times much of the legislation proposed to the Congress and many of the recommendations of the Executive must be designed to meet emergencies. In reaching solutions we must not jeopardize those principles which we have found to be the basis of the growth of the Nation. The Federal Government must not encroach upon nor permit local communities to abandon that precious possession of local initiative and responsibility. Again, just as the largest measure of responsibility in the government of the Nation rests upon local self-government, so does the largest measure of social responsibility in our country rest upon the individual. If the individual surrenders his own initiative and responsibilities, he is surrendering his own freedom and his own liberty. It is the duty of the National Government to insist that both the local governments and the individual shall assume and bear these responsibilities as a fundamental of preserving the very basis of our freedom.

Many vital changes and movements of vast proportions are taking place in the economic world. The effect of these changes upon the future can not be seen clearly as yet. Of this, however, we are sure: Our system, based upon the ideals of individual initiative and of equality of opportunity, is not an artificial thing. Rather it is the outgrowth of the experience of America, and expresses the faith and spirit of our people. It has carried us in a century and a half to leadership of the economic world. If our economic system does not match our highest expectations at all times, it does not require revolutionary action to bring it into accord with any necessity that experience may prove. It has successfully adjusted itself to changing conditions in the past. It will do so again. The mobility of our institutions, the richness of our resources, and the abilities of our people enable us to meet them unafraid. It is a distressful time for many of our people, but they have shown qualities as high in fortitude, courage, and resourcefulness as ever in our history. With that spirit, I have faith that out of it will come a sounder life, a truer standard of values, a greater recognition of the results of honest effort, and a healthier atmosphere in which to rear our children. Ours must be a country of such stability and security as can not fail to carry forward and enlarge among all the people that abundant life of material and spiritual opportunity which it has represented among all nations since its beginning.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 8, 1931.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message will lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR LA FOLLETTE TO THE LEGISLATURE OF WISCONSIN

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the message delivered on November 24, 1931, by Gov. Philip F. La Follette, of Wisconsin, to a special session of the Wisconsin Legislature.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the message was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FELLOW CITIZENS OF THE LEGISLATURE:

You have been summoned in extraordinary session to deal with an extraordinary emergency.

We are in the midst of the greatest domestic crisis since the Civil War. In this crisis people are divided broadly into two groups—one opposes and one favors collective action to meet the emergency and to guard against its recurrence in the future.

Those who oppose collective action base their argument on the supposition that any such action would hamper the return of normal conditions in business; they are apprehensive of the interference of government in its conduct. They point to governmental corruption in some of the States, municipalities, and in certain phases of the National Government. This group insists that if business is given an opportunity it will put its own house in order and restore normal conditions.

Certain business and industrial leaders have taken intelligent and courageous positions, for which they are entitled to high commendation. But throughout the Nation business as a whole has failed to put its house in order, either with reference to the immediate depression or with reference to the adoption of safeguards against a recurrence.

The people have in the past allowed capital to have control of our business machine as well as to receive the larger portion of the financial return from its operation. But capital can not justly expect to remain in control of both management and the lion's share of financial return if it is not willing to assume the responsibility of keeping that machine in operation.

For 10 years our business system has tolerated the deflation of agriculture. For over two years the same process has been doing its work in our cities. For at least two years this system has had every justification for vigorous and energetic action. With a few outstanding exceptions it not only has failed to act but is making the same arguments of delay and procrastination to-day that it made in November, 1929.

Business and industry can not longer expect the public to wait for them to act.

In 1929 the top rung of our Federal financial ladder, comprising 504 individuals, reported net incomes of over $2,000,000 per return. The next rung, numbering 101,000, reported net incomes of $68,000 per return. These two groups represent the upper crust of our business and industrial ownership. To put the matter plainly, they are not worth to our society $2,000,000 a year, or even $68,000 per year, for the kind of leadership they have given us.

Their policy has been tried for two years. It has failed to produce the desired results. They can not justly blame the rest of society for insisting that its one agency for collective action—namely, government—begin to grapple with the problem.

In order to grapple with this or any other problem we must first try to understand it.

We have at least 130,000 people in Wisconsin who are completely out of work and some 50,000 or more who have only partial employment; at least 100,000 farmers in Wisconsin are in financial distress. Thus, one-third to one-half of our population is at various stages ranging from hunger to the pressing danger of losing homes and farms.

A cursory glance at either agriculture or industry alone gives a picture which might lead one to the conclusion that our problem is one of overproduction. We find the farmer with more products than he can sell. We find the factories shut down because they can not sell what they make.

But on closer examination we find literally millions of men and women in our cities actually hungry for the products that the farmer can not sell; we find literally millions of farm homes without the conveniences or comforts produced by our factories.

It is true that industry and agriculture thus both have large stocks of goods which they can not sell and which are labeled "surpluses." There is a vital difference, however, between a surplus which represents goods that can not be consumed and a surplus which represents goods that can not be purchased. At the present time, broadly speaking, our surpluses have resulted from the inability of the consuming public to purchase what they need. They are not surpluses arising because the people have more to eat, more to wear, more to use than they want and need. The farmer can not find a market for his food products and suffers for want of industrial products. Millions of industrial workers and their families are in actual want for the very products which the farmer can not sell.

Under these circumstances the surplus of both agricultural and industrial products is one that has resulted from the inability of the consuming public to buy what they need. The lumber industry affords a striking illustration of this basic fact. While we have a 2-year surplus of lumber, if the American farmer had the money to buy the lumber which he needs—not for new buildings, but to prevent his property from going to rack and ruin, to buy shingles for the roof, to put a new plank in the barn floor where one is rotted—this purchasing power would not only take up that surplus but it would require the lumber industry to operate at 100 per cent production for the next five or six years just to supply the actual needs of the American farmer.

We know that we have had no great natural catastrophe. We know that we have the best-trained labor and the most modern industrial machinery; that we can produce all of the industrial products we want. We know that we have a rich and fertile soil, with the most efficient and best-trained agricultural population, which can easily produce enough food to supply the American population with all that we need.

We know that the farmer wants to trade the products he has raised on his farm for products that are made in the factory. He wants clothes, shoes, farm machinery, electric lights, automobiles, harnesses, and all of the other products that the worker can and does make in the factory. The American farmer has abundant supplies of milk and butter and eggs and vegetables and meats and fruits that he has grown on his farm, which he would like to trade for these other city-made products. But he can not trade them for enough in money to enable him to pay interest and taxes, let alone have enough over to actually buy even a small part of what he needs for himself and his family.

We all know that the worker in the city wants milk and butter and vegetables and meats and the other things that the farmer grows, together with shoes and clothes and the other things that are the products of the industrial system. But millions of our workers are totally without money to buy anything.

It is clear that there is nothing wrong with our power of production. We have created a machine on the farm and in the factory that will produce more than enough to sustain us all. This machine has been producing enough to provide the necessities and many of the luxuries of life for 120,000,000 of people. Nothing has destroyed that machine. It could start functioning to-morrow. It would and it will start functioning the moment that the great mass of people can buy and sell the things which they produce.

Our problem arises out of our system of distribution. That system of distribution is founded on the use of money as the medium of exchange. Instead of the farmer exchanging a load of wheat with an individual worker for a piece of farm machinery the farmer and the worker use money. Since the producers represent at least 95 per cent of our population, and since these producers are dependent upon money in order to exchange the products that they need, the problem before us to-day is the distribution of our medium of exchange so that people can trade with each other.

Putting the problem another way, our industrial and agricultural machine is geared to mass production. Mass production requires mass consumption, and mass consumption requires mass purchasing power.

Analyzing thus the distribution of our purchasing power, have we divided our medium of exchange—money—so that the bulk of people can trade with one another?

The answer is we have not. Even in the so-called boom period of 1925 the average income of wage earners in agriculture, merchandising, mining, manufacturing, transportation, construction, government employees, banking, and unclassified was only $1,384 per year, or approximately $100 per month. In the same year, 1925, the total income of at least 80 per cent of all of the families in the United States was well under $2,000 per year per family.

In 1928 the farmer, representing at least 25 per cent of the population, received less than 10 per cent of the national income.

The share of the wage earners and salaried employees in the total production of industry has decreased since 1920. From 1923 to 1927 the total salaries and wages paid in manufacturing industries in this country were practically stationary, while the return to capital increased by about $2,000,000,000.

In 1920 there were 33 people in the United States who reported taxable incomes to the Federal Government of about $1,000,000. In 1924 there were 75 such million-dollar incomes; in 1929, 504. In 1929 the 504 persons who had net incomes of $1,000,000 or more had total incomes of $1,185,100,000, or more than the selling price of all the wheat and all the cotton produced in the United States in 1930.

In 1929, of the 4,000,000 income taxpayers reporting to the Federal Government:

Seventy-five per cent received one-third of the total reporting income, or approximately $2,700 per return;

Twenty-one per cent received one-third of the total reporting income, or approximately $10,000 per return;

Two and one-half per cent received 28 per cent of the total reporting income, or approximately $68,000 per return; and

One tenth of 1 per cent received 4.8 per cent of the total reporting income, or approximately $2,000,000 per return.

These figures show that year after year the rich have grown richer and the poor poorer. Putting it another way, a small class of our population have each year received far more income than they have been able to spend. This has gone on to a point where now a small group have such a "corner" on the medium of exchange—money—that the rest of us can not get enough money to trade with each other. Being unable to trade with one another, each of us has a surplus of our own particular product but famishes for the products of our neighbors.

Those who are receiving these large incomes are able to spend only a small part of what they receive. They can not use, relatively, more food or clothes or other necessities of life than the rest of us. So being unable to use any large part of their incomes for buying the production of the factory or the farm they use the unexpended income to buy more factories and farms from the rest of us who have grown too poor to own them. Or they use part of their incomes to build more factories and machines than are actually needed. It is this investment of unexpendable incomes in new productive equipment that is largely responsible for whatever overbuilding of plants and machines that exists. And it likewise explains in large part why American capital has invested some fifteen thousand millions of dollars outside of the United States. If these great incomes were actually expended here in America, the money might find its way back to the producers and consumers. But it has not been so spent; instead it has been used to buy ownership of property not only here but all over the world.

The rich, being unable to spend the income they have been receiving, have been using their unexpendable income to acquire more property, which in turn, like a rolling snowball, again increases their already unexpendable income. It is this condition which has brought about a situation where 3 great holding companies control our electricity, where 1 corporation owns more than half of the country's iron resources, where 1 corporation controls more than 90 per cent of the world's nickel resources, where 4 great concerns control the major portion of the country's copper, where 8 concerns closely allied with the railroads own nearly 80 per cent of the Nation's coal, where 2 corporations control over half of the steel, where 2 concerns own and control over half of the meat packing, where 1 per cent of the banks control 99 per cent of the banking resources, and so on.

The monopoly system has at last acquired ownership of so much of our wealth, thereby receiving such a tremendous proportion of the medium of exchange, that the rest of us can not do business with each other.

The World War is correctly cited as one of the prime causes of the present depression. This, in my opinion, is correct, because during the three years of the World War there was a greater concentration of wealth than in any other single period in our history. There was following the World War a pick-up in business conditions, which we now see to have been an inflation period. It is quite possible that we may have another such period. Such temporary pick-ups can be effected through pledging of credit, as was done during the World War. But when the repayment of that credit is imposed upon the great masses of people, as was done by our methods of war financing or by extending the installment-buying plan to every form of short-lived product, it merely accelerates this unsound distribution of purchasing power.

Our problem is the redistribution of our purchasing power to enable our population to receive enough of the medium of exchange—money—to do business.

In trying to solve this problem, both in the present emergency and in the future, it is apparent that we need action by the National Government. Approximately 80 per cent of the net incomes reported for income-tax purposes is paid in only 9 States, although much of it was derived in the other 39 States. Thus New York State alone receives approximately 33 per cent of the total net income above the subsistence level. For a century, through a policy of internal improvements, tariffs, and taxation, we have deliberately encouraged the growth of a national economic life. It is not sheer perversity that makes many of us urge that a like system for distributing wealth and economic power on a national basis be put in action in the present national and international depression.

But because that national system, both political and economic, has not acted and apparently does not intend to act, does not relieve us of the responsibility of using every possible effective course within our own control. If we are reasonably certain that we understand our problem and its causes, we can then at least see that every part of the program which we adopt for dealing with it is kept in the right direction. While our action alone will not remedy the situation nationally, or even within our State, we shall know that our action will help and that we are on the right road and will not have to retrace our steps.

It is just as important to understand our remedy as it is to understand the problem for which we are devising it.

At the time of the formation of our Government this country was primarily agricultural. In a country which is primarily agricultural, each individual is largely self-sustaining. He does not have to trade with some one else. All he requires is a sufficient degree of political government to give him security. With the introduction of machinery following the industrial revolution, our whole economic system has changed. Few, if any of us, are self-sustaining; we have become specialists; we have to trade with one another in order to live.

The men who founded our Government devised a system which was highly satisfactory as a political instrument. They did not devise a Government with broad economic powers, but in their farsighted wisdom they did recognize that the one permanent thing in human society is change. They created a system in which that change could take place peacefully and as the result of intelligent action.

They recognized that human experience teaches us that the progress of mankind in every field and at every point has been advanced by the spark of some individual initiative and vision. They devised a society which gave to the individual the greatest freedom and initiative ever vouchsafed him in all human experience. No careful student can seriously question that the development of this country has been more largely due to this than to any other single human factor.

At the time of the formation of our Republic a very small fraction of the population in the other countries of the world—the nobility—had the extreme degree of liberty, namely, license to do what they pleased, but the great bulk of human beings in all of these countries had no liberty whatever. The founders of our Republic recognized that in order to give liberty to the great mass of human beings there had to be restraints and controls upon the selfish and powerful few.

To-day a small fraction of our population at the very top have complete economic license to do as they please, but the vast proportion of our people are without adequate economic liberty. The passing of free land in 1890 closed the only door of escape for the mass of people. Unless our generation devises some economic control, some reasonable restraints, we shall have missed both the opportunity and the crying need of our time.

As we look over the world to-day we see other nations devising this machinery for economic government. Unfortunately for the progress of the world, most of those attempts are duplicates in the economic field of the political autocracy that prevailed a century ago. We in America should blaze a trail in this economic field as we did in the political field; we should devise instrumentalities for the control of our economic life that will be democratic and in keeping with the experience and traditions of our Republic.

I suggest four definite courses that we may pursue:

(1) The direct control and ownership by the people through their municipal, State, and National Governments of enough of those instruments of common necessity to protect the public against extortionate charges, to insure efficient service, and to the extent of the ownership thus to effect a better distribution of the earning power of those facilities.

(2) The provision of machinery by the State that will enable business—and I use business in its largest sense—to govern itself. I am not here suggesting that the State should take over the problem of running business. I am urging that the State enable business to govern itself intelligently, reserving at all times to the Government both the power and the duty to protect the public from extortion or from combinations for other than sound public purposes.

(3) The provision of machinery for undertaking and carrying on the profound research we need as a society; for the taking of economic and social counsel, and the definite attempt to plan continuously both for the present and the future of our communities.

(4) The equalization of the burden of taxation. The intelligent and courageous use of the taxing power is the most effective thing that can be done immediately in the present emergency. The tax power is organized and established. We do not have to wait to devise and establish it. Taxes represent the largest single expenditure for farmers and for many of our workers who own homes. The use of the taxing power in those States that have been farsighted enough to adopt income and inheritance taxes is an effective instrument with which to redistribute money to enable workers and farmers to trade with one another. If the Federal Government would adopt the financial measures recommended in this message for Wisconsin, it would at once redistribute over two and a quarter billions of dollars of purchasing power, which would be almost the identical sum by which wages and the same sum by which farm prices have been deflated since 1929.

It is conceded on all sides and from all sources that the State of Wisconsin is to-day in a far better position economically than any other State in the Union. This is due primarily to the fact that Wisconsin has been better redistributing the income that comes to it than any other State. In the past 30 years we have changed from raising 90 per cent of our taxes from general property to a point where we now raise only 66 per cent. Our sister States who have not followed our policy are many of them not only face to face with insolvency because of the inability of general property to bear the burden any longer, but likewise their people, year in and year out, have had to pay from their meager incomes a larger and larger share of the total tax burden.

The governor of this State has no power to pass a single law, let alone to enact a program. That function devolves upon the legislature. But the governor does have both the right and the duty, under our constitution, of making recommendations to the legislature.

There will be introduced into both houses of the legislature proposed laws, which, taken together, present a definite and specific program for dealing with the present emergency and for devising instrumentalities for the future. These measures, coupled with what legislation has already been adopted by you, would if enacted into law lay the foundations for a definite attempt upon our part to meet the demands of our time, so far as it lies within our power to act within a single State and one session of the legislature.

This program divides itself naturally into two parts: That dealing with the present emergency and that relating to an effort on our part to begin to lay down safeguards against recurrences of depressions such as the present one.

Our first responsibility is to enable the towns, cities, villages, and counties of this State to provide the necessities of life for our fellow citizens who are in want. These people can not wait while we create some ideal system of distribution of either income or the necessities of life. It seems to me clear, therefore, that we must use the local governmental agencies already established, reserving to the State supervisory control over the funds which it provides.

The towns, cities, villages, and counties of this State will expend approximately $6,000,000 more for providing food, shelter, and clothing for our needy citizens this year than it was necessary to provide in 1928. The expenditure which each town, city, village, and county has had to make this year is a better indication of the burden which each locality is now bearing than any other that has been suggested. There are, however, certain localities which, due to the size of their burden and their lack of wealth, have been unable to raise from any source of local taxation this year the funds which they actually need. It is likewise manifest that every locality will have a considerably heavier burden to meet in 1932 than it had in 1931 This means that $6,000,000 does not measure the actual funds that will be necessary to carry this load. The best estimate that I have been able to obtain indicates that it will be approximately twice this sum. If the State, therefore, were to provide $6,000,000, this, together with what the municipalities will raise, should enable the localities to provide the minimum necessities for our people.

I recommend that this legislature immediately appropriate $3,000,000 to be paid to the several towns, cities, villages, and counties of the State as they submit evidence to the State of the excess of their 1931 expenditures for relief over 1928, thus providing each town, city, village, and county immediately with one-half of the excess of 1931 over 1928.

I recommend an appropriation of another $3,000,000 to the towns, cities, villages, and counties of the State to be paid to them upon a showing to the State of their compliance with such reasonable standards as the State may provide.

It is far preferable to provide work than to provide charity, whether public or private. It is therefore sound and proper that the State should provide that its funds should be used:

(a) Preferably for the direct labor costs of public works, not exceeding 50 per cent of the entire cost of the project.

(b) For poor relief when public works can not be practicably provided.

(c) Subject to requirements that will provide work for citizens of our own State under proper working conditions and standards.

In order to provide for special emergencies in those localities where the burden now is or may become excessive, I recommend an appropriation of $1,000,000 to an agency of the State to be used as a fund to provide relief in localities which find themselves in special distress.

Just as many of us feel that it is a glaring injustice to impose the cost of this national emergency upon a locality irrespective of its wealth, and are convinced that we should meet the problem as a nation with all of the sources of national wealth being required to bear a proportionate cost of the burden, so we feel that even with the failure of the National Government to act, we as a State should apply the same fundamental principle, namely, that this emergency will be met as a community and that those who are best able to carry the burden shall carry a proportionate amount of it.

It thus becomes manifest that if the total relief burden of this depression amounts to some twelve millions of dollars, the State should provide additional aid for the reduction of taxes upon general property. Since the tax rolls for the towns, cities, and villages have already been made up, the best and fairest method of affording tax reduction to the individual taxpayer in 1932 is for the State to appropriate funds to the several counties to enable them to reduce their county tax. Every part of the taxation program of this session of the legislature has been to prevent an increase in the total of all taxes, to reduce them where possible, but in any event to make every available new tax dollar go for the purpose of reducing taxes rather than increasing the total tax burden. The 1931 highway law puts a definite limit upon total highway expenditures and requires the additional funds available from the increased gasoline tax to be used for the reduction of the general property tax for highway purposes. I think it proper, therefore, for the State to require that a similar policy be adopted by any county receiving aid from the State in a tax-reduction program. I recommend an appropriation of a sum sufficient (approximately $4,750,000) to enable and require every county in the State to reduce the tax upon general property $1 per thousand dollars of valuation. But I recommend that proper safeguards be provided to carry out fairly this policy of tax reduction you have followed in this legislature.

If this legislature adopts this recommendation, this legislature will have provided the taxpayers of this State a tax reduction upon general property of approximately $20,000,000, or 16 per cent of the total property tax for all purposes in Wisconsin. This would be the largest and most substantial reduction of general property taxes in the history not only of Wisconsin but of any State in the Union

In order to enable the towns, cities, villages, and counties of this State to build in this period of low prices and to provide work rather than charity, I recommend the revision and amendment of the existing statutes with relation to bonding to enable the several localities to issue promptly, if they so desire, their general bonds for relief and for public works. However, before such bonds can actually be sold I recommend that each locality be required to submit the definite project to be thus financed to an agency of the State in order that the State may be assured that the project is necessary and economical and will afford the maximum of employment for the dollar expended, and likewise in order that the State may be assured as nearly as practicable that such bonds can be retired without increasing the tax upon general property. The State should appropriate a sum sufficient to enable the State to aid localities in the doing of such works.

In everything that has been done publicly or privately the younger unmarried man has been overlooked. We have some 25,000 of these younger unmarried and unemployed men in Wisconsin. I do not need to point out that they are quite as important a part of our citizenship as any other element, and in some ways they are more important for the future than those who are older. Many of them have had less experience with life and are in their formative years. It would be both cruel and unwise to neglect them. I know that it will appeal to the people of this State if we make a constructive effort to make some provision for them. It is not possible for us within our financial means to provide work for them all in public works.

We have, however, a vast area in northern Wisconsin that is in urgent need of reforestation and better fire protection. If we can induce some substantial part of these younger men to cooperate with the State in the doing of this necessary and valuable public work, we may be able to do something for them and a great deal for the future spiritual and material wealth of Wisconsin. At my request a tentative program has been prepared. If these younger men are willing to help the State in this long-time enterprise, the State could, within our financial means, provide them the necessities of life and a modest wage in this emergency. It will be impracticable to commence this work, however, until early spring. The principal educators of the State have cooperated in devising a plan for a combination of vocational education and noncompetitive works during the winter—that is, upon public works that are desirable but which the localities and the State could not expect to finance in a competitive market at the present time.

The effectiveness of the latter part of this program for these younger men will depend entirely upon the ability of the localities to prepare programs of noncompetitive works and vocational education with sufficient rapidity so as to be effective before the winter is over. In view of the probable difficulty of getting such a program into sufficiently wide operation to be of immediate effect upon this problem during the winter I recommend that the legislature urge localities to care for these younger men through their outdoor relief during the winter. I recommend that this legislature appropriate $5,000,000 to an agency of the State to finance, control, and supervise the carrying out of this program for younger men.

Large numbers of owners of our farms and homes are laboring under great difficulty in keeping those homes with lack of or decreased income, and I therefore recommend, under reasonable safeguards, that the period of redemption in the foreclosure of mortgages and land contracts may be extended in the discretion of the courts on proper showing during this emergency.

Every thoughtful person sees the relationship between the hours of labor and the present depression. Hours of labor are another way of expressing income. The changes that have taken place from doing the world's work by hand to doing it by machine ought to have meant a lessening in the total amount of work that we all have to do. But each individual industrial plant, operating as it does without general economic government, is forced to look upon each new invention not as a labor-saving device but as a money-making device. This is why in the 30-year period from 1899 to 1929 there has been a decrease of only about 15 per cent in the hours of labor while our production has increased nearly 100 per cent. We can no longer proceed with the idea that technological changes—that is, the invention of new labor-saving machinery which displaces hundreds of thousands of men—can be entirely ignored as of no public concern.

I am not saying that it is desirable or feasible that we should seek to discourage socially sound inventions. I do mean that in considering a labor-saving invention there is no ultimate social or economic gain if the man power displaced from a private industry is shifted to public or private charity.

We must find some basic principle that will act as a guide in this problem of machine production. We have such a principle in relation to taxation, namely, that taxes should be levied in accordance with ability to pay them. Wisconsin's definite attempt to apply that principle to the operation of its government during the past 30 years enables this State to face the present emergency in a better financial condition with less of a tax burden upon those least able to bear it than any other State in America to-day. If we could find some basic principle to apply to this problem of both cyclical and technological unemployment it would be an outstanding achievement.

Such a principle has been suggested. That principle succinctly stated is this: That as an economic society we should adopt the standard that whatever work there is to be done shall be done by all of us; if we have a large volume, we all can work more; if we have a smaller volume, we all will do less. We will not willingly submit to a system that makes the farmer work 15 hours a day while others have no work at all. It is based on our unwillingness to permit to grow up in our society a system which has half of us at work and half of us idle. The application of such a principle in times such as these would mean that those who are now fully employed would have to share that employment with others less fortunate.

But the application of this principle should not and does not mean that anyone should be permitted to work for less than a living wage. Through the application of the principle of collective bargaining, labor has been able to gain for itself substantial recognition of its rights. At the present time many of those standards are being broken down or endangered through the enormous numbers of unemployed who in desperation are ready to accept work upon any terms. Nothing will do more toward protecting labor's achievements than steps that will help to put people back to work.

We are definitely committed and strongly in favor of the principle of collective bargaining. Just as we are not in favor of the Government taking the responsibility of running business so we are not in favor of Government unnecessarily taking the responsibility of fixing wages. Our problem is to devise machinery that will enable both labor and business to govern themselves and protect their rights and interests.

Up to the present time our industrial system has been operated with the machine as the central point. We have regulated our shifts, our hours, our whole plant operations in order that the machine could function at its maximum point of efficiency. It seems clear to me that we have to shift that point from the machine to the human beings that operate it; instead of figuring how human beings must work in order to keep the machinery operating we must figure how we must run the machinery to keep the men at work. Courageous and intelligent industrial leadership has already demonstrated not only the human value in such a program but that it pays as an economic venture in ensuring mass consumption.

In order to put this program into action it requires that business shall be able reasonably and accurately to estimate the demand for its product over a given period. It can then regulate the hours of employment of those normally employed in the industry so as to provide regular and continuous employment. Wage and working standards won by labor would not then be ruthlessly menaced or destroyed by wholesale discharging of employees.

There is no group more interested in or concerned about the problem of unemployment and fluctuations in the business cycle than intelligent business management itself, and there is in my mind a diffrence between both the attitude and the understanding of our problems on the part of those who are actively engaged in and have the responsibility for business management and those whose only connection with or interest in the business system is solely their ownership of stocks and bonds.

The problem that faces intelligent business management in any attempt to cope with this underlying matter is the lack of any adequate machinery for self-government. Instance after instance could be cited where 75 per cent of both the plants and the volume of a given industry were clearly satisfied as to the public necessity of a given course of action only to be frustrated by the selfishness or lack of understanding of a very small minority within that industry.

I am convinced that we have reached the time where we must help business to devise machinery to stabilize itself, for the better protection of the rights of labor and the public interest generally.

A part of the program to be presented to you provides for the creation of chapter 109 of the Statutes, relating to the stabilization of employment. The purposes of this act are well summarized in its introductory clause, which reads: "The purpose of this chapter is to promote the stabilization of industry and thereby to prevent the widespread distress and resulting great public expense incident to the ruthless discharge of workmen when industrial depression curtails demand or when improved machinery or processes are introduced. It is declared to be the duty of employers to do everything possible within their control to give steady and full-time employment, and when this is not possible, to reduce hours of labor so as to equitably distribute the available work. It is the further purpose of this chapter to enable employers to meet this obligation through combinations and joint action, with safeguards to prevent unreasonable restraints of trade."

Section 109.08 would authorize, subject to the approval of the executive council and on recommendation of the department of agriculture and markets, "any group of employers in the same industry or community" to "associate themselves in a board of trade" for the purpose of stabilizing employment. This section proposes to enable employers in the same industry or community to create, subject to the supervision of the State, organizations for their own self-government. They may establish rules and regulations and agreements for the stabilization of their industry.

Section 109.09 would provide that every such organization shall have a public-policy committee consisting of not less than three members who are selected to represent the interest of the consumers, employees, and other groups distinct from but affected by the operation of the board of trade.

Section 109.10 would provide that on the direction of the governor or of either house of the legislature or on recommendation of the public-policy committee of any board of trade that such organization is not functioning in the public interest the department of agriculture and markets shall conduct a public hearing to determine whether the approval of the State should be withdrawn. If after such hearing the department determines that the board has not in good faith complied with the purposes of the chapter, or is not functioning in the public interest, the approval of the State is then to be withdrawn.

Section 109.11 would provide that so long as such an organization is acting under the approval of the State that fact shall be prima facie evidence that it is not violating the antitrust laws of this State, and that such organization, in the event of prosecution under the Federal laws, so long as it has approval of the State, shall have the support of the State in any such prosecution.

Sections 109.02 to 109.07 would provide that the industrial commission of this State shall from time to time regulate and fix by order the hours of industries and occupations so as to protect the employee and the public from the effects of both cyclical and technological unemployment. However, those employers who in good faith take advantage of the State's offer to assist them in governing themselves are exempted from the provisions. Thus, by this measure the State would aid and encourage industry in its own self-government. In connection with those individual employers or industries which are unwilling to accept any responsibility for their own stabilization, the State, through the industrial commission, would undertake the regulation of the hours of employment to equalize as nearly as practicable the effects of both technological and cyclical unemployment.

I do not suggest that we have in some miraculous fashion discovered a cure-all for the problem of unemployment. I do maintain that the only way we have made any progress in the past is from our experience. Out of the experience of recent years we have learned certain things which indicate that certain steps are now necessary. I have no doubt that as we try the program which we are indicating we shall discover both weaknesses and strengths where we did not expect to find them. But we shall never discover anything or make any progress unless we try.

During the first nine months of 1930 our national industrial and business system was able to and did pay $432,000,000 more in dividends and $191,000,000 more in interest than it did in 1929; in the first nine months of 1931, the second year of the depression, it paid $374,000,000 more in dividends and $338,000,000 more in interest than it did in the first nine months of 1929. In the first nine months of 1929 the total interest and dividends paid was $5,559,000,000, while in the first nine months of 1931, the second year of the business depression, it paid $6,279,000,000 in interest and dividends. Our business and industrial machine was able to pay $720,000,000 more in interest and dividends in the first nine months of 1931 than it paid in the first nine months of 1929. A substantial portion of both the interest and dividends paid in 1930 and 1931 has been paid out of reserves built up for those purposes. Business and industry have, then, felt an obligation to and have built up reserves in times of prosperity to meet the obligations of interest and dividends.

The great bulk of industry has not built up these reserves for unemployment in the past. The question of unemployment compensation relates, then, solely to what is to be done as to future depressions. No voluntary or compulsory plan adopted at this time can affect the present unemployment. Whatever is done now will be done as a safeguard for the future, not the present.

The majority of those in control of industry are strongly opposed to any compulsory legislation. Their position is that if the State will give industry an opportunity it will establish fair voluntary systems of its own accord.

No one contends that voluntary or compulsory unemployment compensation will actually compensate for any prolonged period of unemployment. The great objective of unemployment compensation is to reduce unemployment. Workmen's compensation does not and was not intended primarily as compensation for loss of life or limb. The purpose of both unemployment and workmen's compensation is to put a penalty on the conditions that cause loss of life and limb or jobs. Workmen's compensation has succeeded not only because it pays compensation but because it has made industry eliminate unsafe machines and conditions of work. Workmen's compensation has given Wisconsin the finest record in America for safety.

If industry fails to pay its interest money it is penalized by loss of the business. If management fails to earn dividends it hears from the stockholders, and may be and often is discharged. If industry has conditions which cause loss of life or limb, it is penalized. Industry has therefore built protection for interest and dividends, and has enormously reduced the causes of accidents. But to-day industry is under no immediate penalty for failure to eliminate as far as possible unemployment. Unemployment compensation, voluntary or compulsory, proposes to impose that penalty.

Many of us question, not the sincerity, but the feasibility of industry's establishing a voluntary system. We are convinced that it is not fair to the rest of society for industry to make great profits in periods of prosperity only to turn its employees over to public or private charity in a period of depression.

It seems to me that the fairest method of procedure for us at this time is to adopt a just and sound compulsory unemployment compensation program for Wisconsin, but to make the taking of effect of such legislation conditional upon industry's failure to establish a fair voluntary system in Wisconsin within a reasonable time.

The interim committee on unemployment, after careful study and consideration, recommends what is commonly known as the Groves bill for unemployment compensation. My study of this subject leads me to the conclusion that the Groves plan is the soundest and fairest compulsory plan yet suggested anywhere. I recommend the adoption of the Groves plan for unemployment compensation, to be conditional, however, upon the failure of industry to adopt a comparable plan for a substantial part of those employed in manufacturing in this State by July 1, 1933.

BANKING

There will be submitted to you two bills relating to the subject of banking. These bills are the products of the hearings by and are presented with the approval of the interim committee on banking.

There are people to-day who urge that this is not a proper time for the enactment of legislation relating to the subject of banking. It is better to call the doctor before some one is sick and avoid the sickness entirely, but if we have failed to do that and the sickness comes upon us, we need the best medical attention that can be provided. Banking more than any other occupation is founded on confidence. The public generally is fully aware that all of our economic institutions, including banks, have felt the effect of this depression. We do not help the banking situation by attempting either to ignore it or to do nothing about it. We can not in one year correct the mistakes of the past 20 years. But we can do all within our power to prevent the consequences of the past 20 years from doing any more damage than is necessary, and we can learn by our mistakes in the past and do our best to guard against them in the future.

I believe we can make no greater contribution to the stability of our banking system than for the public to know and understand that we are not ignoring this vital problem. We inspire confidence, not by putting our heads ostrich fashion into the sand, but by convincing the public that we understand our problem and are applying the best available remedies.

It is just to say that the general condition of the great majority of the banks in Wisconsin is better and stronger than that of any other State similarly situated. It is our duty and our privilege to make that position better, both now and in the future. The two bills presented to you by the interim committee on banking show that that committee faced and dealt with the problem of banking in the attitude which I have described.

The interim committee on banking, composed of able representation from this legislature and of the banks of this State, presents a comprehensive and carefully prepared program representing their mature judgment. I know of no higher compliment that could have been paid to their efforts than the reception that has been given to the bills which they have prepared. While there are objections to their program, the objections relate to underlying matters of public policy. No question or suggestion has been raised that their program is ill considered or poorly drawn. If you agree with the objectives which these bills seek to obtain, you will agree with the banking program. If you disagree with the objectives desired by the interim committee on banking, you will oppose one or both of these bills.

The first bill revises and strengthens the supervision and control of the State banking department over State banks and provides for the reorganization of the banking department. It broadens the definition of banking to include those corporations and individuals who are in fact in the banking business but are not now under the control or supervision of the banking department. The banking laws of Wisconsin were last revised in the legislative session of 1905. Since that time vast changes have taken place in every phase of our life. It is clear we need thorough revision of the legislation relating to banks. This first bill relates to the revision of this part of the banking law. It recognizes that three factors have been primarily responsible for the difficulties of our financial institutions: (1) The economic depression, (2) management, and (3) overbanking.

This bill recognizes that the banking department can do a great deal, if given adequate personnel and authority, in the matter of bank management and overbanking. Heretofore the banking commissioner's powers have been limited practically to closing banks. But closing a bank is not a remedy. The proposal in this bill is to improve the personnel of the banking department by placing its personnel under the protection of the civil service law, and to provide adequate compensation so that the State can obtain the services of men who have the experience, the character, and the ability to discharge adequately the responsibility of this important department.

This bill gives to the banking department wider authority over the management of the banks and over the individuals who conduct them. Recognizing that no one individual should have either the authority or the responsibility to discharge these widened powers, this bill creates an advisory council composed of five members to be appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate. This advisory council would be composed both of bankers and representatives of the economic interests of the State. It is their duty to advise with the banking commissioner and likewise to act as a board of review to enable any bank or individual aggrieved or dissatisfied with the action of the banking commissioner to present his case and obtain, if he is entitled to it, a reversal of the order of the banking commissioner.

The problem of overbanking has nothing to do with independent banking, chain banking, branch banking, or group banking. Overbanking has been caused by the granting of too many bank charters and by changes in our methods of transportation. Twenty-five years ago a community may have been in position to support one or more banks, while to-day, with the shortening of distances by automobile transportation, it may not be able to support adequately the number of banks that it now has.

This bill stabilizes the policy of the banking department by providing appeals to the courts in the granting or refusing of bank charters.

The interim committee on banking takes the position, with which I heartily agree, that bankers as a profession and the State as a whole owe a joint responsibility in the conduct of banking; that the failure of any bank causes hardship upon not only every other bank but upon the whole economic life of the community affected. In a large proportion of cases this problem of overbanking can be worked out, without loss to the depositors, by gradual liquidation, consolidation with other banks, or improvement of management. But this problem of overbanking can only be met by some constructive action. If left to itself—without help, supervision, or direction—it means that many banks in the United States will sooner or later close, with the consequent loss to the innocent depositor. This problem is met by giving the banking commissioner greater authority over management and by giving him authority, under proper safeguards, to order consolidations of banks.

No one contends that if this program is adopted there would never be any bank failures. We do contend that if this bill is adopted, together with the bill providing for the establishment of clearing-house associations, there would be far less bank failures than if the situation were left without leadership or direction. I commend this first bill of the interim committee on banking to your earnest consideration and call your attention to the fact that it has the almost unanimous support of the banking profession and is free from any partisan question, and that it can be adopted even though two-thirds of both houses of this legislature are not in agreement with our position upon chain banking.

The other bill recommended by the interim committee on banking offers a constructive solution to the problem of the concentration of control of our credit system through chain or group banking.

The majority of the members of this legislature and all of the State officers were elected upon a platform which pledges us to use the powers possessed by the State to enable the people of Wisconsin to keep control of the credit which they have created. This bill fulfills that platform commitment. I recommend its adoption not alone because of our contractual obligation to the voters of this State but because the remedy it proposes is right and in the best interests of the people of Wisconsin.

This bill authorizes and directs the banking commissioner to establish in the State of Wisconsin clearing-house associations composed of both State and National banks. This would divide the State into natural commercial and business districts and unite the banks within such natural districts into homogeneous groups with common economic interests.

At the outset every bank in this State would be eligible to membership, subject to the limitations I shall call to your attention. Once established it would mean that all of the banks of this State would be grouped together into local associations. Each group is given the machinery and the authority, subject to common supervision by the banking department, of governing and regulating the conduct of its members. From time to time these several associations will be able to establish and enforce standards and regulations which will insure the highest degree of stability and security for the depositor. Through a relatively small contribution by each of the member banks each will be able to receive and be guided by research, information, advice, and suggestions heretofore limited to only those institutions with great aggregations of wealth. It would enable the member banks to participate in the underwriting and the sale of the safest and most desirable securities at the best possible prices. This plan will give to all of the banks of Wisconsin every benefit and a great deal more than is offered by any program of chain or group banking.

The limitation upon membership in these associations is that no bank may become a member where 10 per cent or more of its stock is held by a holding company. This limitation is inserted, first, because the holding company is the device used for the creation of chain or group banking and, second, because the ownership of bank stock by holding companies is the method by which stock speculation is interjected into banking. If speculation in stocks has any justification in other fields, it certainly has no place in the banking profession.

One of the substantial evils of chain or group banking is that it introduces stock promotion into the ownership of banks. Banking deals primarily with other people's money. Those that are appealed to by speculative profits and various forms of gambling have no place in and should be ruthlessly excluded from banking.

In order to encourage and foster independent banking, eliminate stock promotion, and eventually bring about a complete restoration of local ownership and control of credit in Wisconsin, all of the privileges within the control of the State are granted exclusively to those banks that are members of the clearing-house associations.

Putting this program in the simplest terms, its adoption would mean: The State agrees to give those rights and privileges over which it has control to the banks in this State that agree:

(a) That they will cooperate and work one with another to give Wisconsin a strong, safe, and stable banking system.

(b) That so far as humanly possible stock speculation and promotion are to be eliminated from the banking system of Wisconsin.

(c) That they will agree that the ownership of banks should be in the hands of individuals who primarily reside in and are a part of the community life whose money is deposited in their banks.

(d) That they will stand together and discharge the obligations of their profession toward the public by recognizing their responsibility, not only for their own individual banks but for the other banks within their own territory.

The people of this State have spoken in unmistakable terms in opposition to the establishment of any system of banking which means loss of the control of their own money. It is now argued by some, however, that in view of the economic depression nothing should be done with reference to the chain-banking question. They argue that the chain banks are more stable; that the chain-banking system is not now doing any harm, but, on the contrary, it is being helpful to other banks in this State through the making of loans to those institutions; and that it would therefore be best to do nothing about the matter at the present time.

Chain banking in Wisconsin is conducted, like any other banking business, for profit. The banks in the chain system have made loans to other banks in Wisconsin. As of September 29, the parent bank of our largest chain system had loaned approximately three and a quarter millions of dollars to other banks. On the same date, however, it had between twenty-five and thirty millions of dollars that belonged to the banks of Wisconsin. The loans which this bank has made to the other banks have been amply secured with the best collateral and interest paid in advance. This bank has never loaned to the other banks any substantial part of the money which the other banks have themselves had on deposit.

It is essential that we understand clearly that there is nothing in the system of either independent or chain banking that in and of itself makes for security of deposits. Benjamin Anderson, chief economist for the largest bank in the world, quotes with approval the following statement: "After all, good banking is not a matter of size. A properly conducted small country bank can be as safe as a large city institution with many branches. Success in the banking field depends on good management whether the unit be large or small * * *."

The issue between chain and independent banking does not mean that those who oppose chain banking are not in favor of strong and stable banks. Every sensible person wants just that, and every careful student of the banking question freely acknowledges that strength and stability of banks are not determined by whether the bank belongs to a group, is a branch, or is independent. It depends, first, upon certain economic factors; and, second, upon management.

The issue involved in chain banking is: Who is to own and control the money that the people produce? Is it to be owned and controlled by that community or is it to be owned and controlled by individuals and corporations a long way off? Are we to have democratic or autocratic control of our credit system?

If we were actually confronted with the alternative of the loss of every dollar we now own as against the control of our future earning power, I would have no question in deciding in favor of the control of our future earnings. The total number of dollars in all of the banks of Wisconsin to-day represents less than half of the income of the people of Wisconsin in a single year. Regardless of the rights of our children, we of to-day would be making a very poor bargain to sell the control of our economic future for a price amounting to less than half of one year's income.

But we confront no such choice. The chief objective of the banking program here recommended is to give Wisconsin strong and stable banks and at the same time to keep the control of our own money. If this program is adopted, Wisconsin takes the position that alien ownership and stock speculation are to have no place in the public banking system of this State.

This banking program is in keeping with the basic program we are trying to pursue, namely, of enabling the various parts of our economic life to construct machinery that will enable them to govern themselves. It is again an application of America's experience and tradition to the problems which we face.

The emergency program presented to you calls for the minimum amount of administration by the State. The funds for direct relief are to be expended through the local agencies of government. The funds for tax reduction are paid directly to the several counties and are to be used for the direct reduction of taxes. I am sure you will agree that for a program dealing with an emergency that administrative discretion is reduced to the minimum.

But reduced as it is to a minimum, there is nevertheless necessity for a highly important duty of administration. In order to insure both the State and the communities against wasteful and uneconomic expenditures, as well as provide the proper care for our needy citizens, supervisory control over the State's own funds should be reserved to some agency of the State. The fairness and efficiency of the administration of any duty require above all other things a centering of the responsibility for that administration. The administration of this program, or such program as may be adopted by this legislature, is at the least an onerous and heavy task. It is not one that anyone would seek. But administration is naturally part of the executive functions of the Government. I, therefore, recommend that the unemployment commission membership be enlarged and that the additional members be appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate, and that the thus enlarged unemployment commission be charged with the responsibility and given adequate authority to carry out that responsibility.

We come now to the vital question of financing the emergency program recommended to you herein.

The foundation of any program, whether it be public or private, for dealing with this problem is finance; how much money is to be provided and where is the money coming from? The program recommended to you will require a cash outlay in 1932 of approximately $16,000,000. It will require an additional sum which can be financed over a period of several years.

I have heretofore pointed out why it is a manifest injustice for the Federal Government to fail to help. Its present policy means that the rich States get off at the expense of the poorer ones; or, rather, that the rich people in the rich States get off at the expense of the poorer people everywhere. The failure of the National Government to act simply means that those people of wealth in this State will be required to carry a heavier share of the load than they would if all the wealth in this country would be required to share its proportionate part. In the program I am recommending, provision is made for a proportionate reduction of our emergency taxation for whatever relief funds may be provided by the Federal Government.

In financing this emergency an important consideration should be the State's credit and reputation for solvency. We are now reaping the benefit of having had the courage to levy a substantial tax to pay our soldiers' bonus obligations in full, while States and other communities are groaning under the burden of levying taxes in these hard times to pay the interest and part of the principal of their soldiers' bonus bonds.

By meeting this emergency with an emergency-tax program we will maintain our leadership in sound governmental finance as compared with our chief industrial competitors.

At the close of 1928 the bonded debt of all governmental units in Wisconsin was $160,000,000. The corresponding debts for Wisconsin's competing States were as follows:

New York	$2,662,000,000
Ohio	954,000,000
Michigan	758,000,000
Illinois	677,000,000
Minnesota	316,000,000
Indiana	192,000,000
Wisconsin	160,000,000

These total bonded debts are much more significant when reduced to a per capita basis. After this is done the favorable showing of Wisconsin's policy is still apparent. Based on the 1930 census, the seven States had the following per capita net bonded indebtedness on January 1, 1930:

New York	$211
Michigan	157
Ohio	144
Minnesota	123
Illinois	89
Indiana	59
Wisconsin	54

The present per capita debt of each citizen in Wisconsin is $54. This is approximately one-fourth that of the inhabitants of the State of New York and about one-third that of the taxpayers of Ohio and Michigan.

I recommend an emergency surtax upon individual and corporation net incomes, irrespective of capital gains or losses and from whatever sources derived. I would favor rates even higher than here suggested, but recommend the adoption of rates no lower than:

One per cent upon corporations.

A flat exemption from the surtax of $800 and $1,500 for unmarried and married persons or heads of families, respectively, and $400 for each child or dependent member of the family.

On the excess income over the exemptions I recommend a surtax as follows: 1 per cent under $1,000, 3 per cent on $1,000 to $2,000, 5 per cent on $2,000 to $3,000, 7 per cent on $3,000 to $4,000, 9 per cent on $4,000 to $5,000, 12 per cent on $5,000 to $10,000, 15 per cent on $10,000 to $25,000, 20 per cent on $25,000 to $50,000, 25 per cent on $50,000 to $100,000, and 30 per cent on $100,000 or over.

This, it is estimated, will produce on this year's individual incomes $13,600,000. The corporation surtax should produce approximately $1,500,000. I recommend a permanent chain-store tax for the reasons stated in my message of June 4. If adopted, this should produce approximately $1,500,000 annually. I recommend the adoption of the gift tax upon all gifts with appropriate exemptions.

The surtax should be for one year only and only on the net income of 1931. This taxation program will produce the necessary revenue to provide the necessary cash for 1932, and the chain-store tax will produce the revenue for the State to carry its share in the retirement of local bonds issued for public works over a period of years.

If this taxation program is adopted, the State will be taking a sound position. It will require everyone from the lowest to the highest who has a net cash income in 1931 over and above the subsistence level to make a proportionate contribution to Wisconsin's "community chest" to meet our community responsibilities.

There has been a great deal of agitation from industrial and other sources for a cut in the wages of wage earners, "white-collar" workers, and public employees. There is genuine merit and justice in such a program if it meant a proportionate deflation for everybody. The difficulty with any deflation program that has been thus far suggested is that it deflates the wage earner and the salaried worker, but there is no proposal to deflate the income of the bondholder, the mortgage holder, and the recipient of interest on term obligations. For the first nine months of 1931 wages to labor and the farmers' income had each been cut approximately two and one-half billion dollars from the 1929 figure. But the total of dividends and interest had actually increased over 1929. The dollar of the wage earner and salaried worker buys more, but so does the dollar that comes from invested capital. Labor and agriculture have taken approximately a 20 per cent cut in income. But for the first nine months of 1931 capital not only had taken no real cut but the purchasing power of its income had increased 20 per cent. Hence capital, so far as income is concerned, is 40 per cent better off for the first nine months of 1931 than it was in 1929. All of these proposals for wage and salary cuts are deemed by big business to be sound economics. But any serious proposal to deflate invested capital proportionately would be assailed. "Deflate the farmer." "Deflate the worker." "Deflate the salaried man." That is "sound." But deflate invested capital, and that is another story.

The United States Steel Corporation, which took leadership in wage cutting, showed by its last annual report that it had $117,000,000 of cash on hand and $471,000,000 of undivided surplus. If it was necessary for "sound" economics to cut the wages of the steel worker 10 per cent, why do we find no program for the deflation of this enormous cash and undivided surplus? In the first nine months of this year the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. made $5,000,000 in excess of the highest total ever earned by this company in any equivalent period. Why have we had no proposals for the deflation in the charges to the American public by "the world's greatest corporation"?

If we have correctly analyzed our problem, we now see clearly that any deflation in the earnings of those who receive no more than a decent subsistence level decreases the very purchasing power that we are trying to increase in order to reestablish decent conditions.

We will not help but hurt our problem if we impose the burden so as to decrease the earnings of those below the subsistence level. In dividing income or jobs or anything else there should be no division which reduces people below the standard of living our producing power can easily and properly support.

It would be better for our morale and our society if employers, public and private, would each see that they provide both employment and a living wage for all of their own normal employees. The State should do it. Industry should do it. To just the extent that this is done we shall reduce both the necessity for and the cost of relief, public and private.

But in this emergency we must not deflate the earnings of the 80 per cent of American families who represent the mass of our purchasing power. Our job in the financing of our program is clearly to finance it in accordance with people's ability to pay by a surtax on incomes above the subsistence level.

If Wisconsin adopts this policy of meeting this emergency we can in truth say to the United States Steel Corporation and similar business and industrial leadership: "If there is to be any wage cutting, whether of public or private employees, we will all take our cuts—the millionaire, the bondholder, and the interest receiver right along with the farmer, the worker, and the salaried man."

I am opposed to waste, to overpayment for anything or to anybody at any time, whether in depressions or in prosperity. Wherever and whenever any individual in the public service in any of its forms is receiving more than he is worth his salary should be cut. But any blanket cutting of salaries in public or private employment is merely another method of making the poor poorer and the rich richer. I am opposed to it. I am in favor of meeting the costs of this depression in accordance with Wisconsin's traditional tax policy of people contributing in accord with their ability to pay. That means that those who have net incomes above the subsistence level must contribute their share in proportion to the size of their income.

The public needs able, courageous, and efficient servants at any time. It needs such services in the period that lies ahead of us especially. It needs public servants who have the intelligence and the courage to fight the self-interest of some of the greatest corporations in America. Public servants as a class do not expect the high salaries of private business. They are willing to accept reasonable salaries for the opportunity that the public service affords. They are more than willing to do their share in this emergency, but they object, and they object on just and fair grounds, to be singled out and required to contribute from 10 per cent to 25 per cent of their gross incomes while some millionaire is asked, under the President's scheme, to give "what he can afford," which may be anything from nothing up to a modest fraction of his net income. If the plan here recommended is adopted all public officials and employees will take a reduction in their incomes above the subsistence level, in the same proportion as others with similar incomes. And this is the essential point, they are not alone asked to contribute. They all take a proportionate cut; they all share equally according to their means. The vast proportion of human beings are reasonable, and are willing to carry a burden that is fair and equitable. Men revolt when they feel they are imposed upon.

Wisconsin has had a distinguished public service. It has earned the right to be treated fairly, and for my part I will do all in my power to insure that it pays the same proportionate share, but I will not willingly consent to seeing it discriminated against.

THE END

At your regular session you adopted constitutional amendments and enacted statutes which go as far as it is now possible for us to go in carrying out Wisconsin's power program. It is the most basic and far-reaching program on the part of any State in the Union in regaining control for the people of essential mechanical energy—electricity. The execution of that program will go far toward giving the State and its municipalities the direct control and ownership of a sufficient amount of power to protect the people of this State in one of the most vital of their common necessities. Generally throughout Wisconsin we own our water. Control of this substantial part of our electricity will give us light, heat, and power.

You have created a body for the intelligent examination of our common problems in the executive council. We have outstanding resources, in character and intelligence, in Wisconsin's industrial, agricultural, and business world. I acknowledge the splendid response that has been given to the State's effort to mobilize that creative capacity. No one should be disturbed for Wisconsin's future with this leadership that exists within our borders, a leadership that is so willing and anxious to bury partisan consideration for our common good. While it may be my lot to be chief executive of Wisconsin I shall continue to call to the State's service the best brains and character, regardless of residence, politics, or wealth, that we can obtain. Wisconsin needs the best. So far as I may be able to influence it, Wisconsin shall have the best.

The adoption of the program herein recommended would give us machinery for inaugurating a definite attempt to enable and require business to stabilize itself in the public interest.

This legislature has not yet met the challenge of our permanent tax problem. But the adoption of this emergency tax program would be a substantial achievement.

The adoption of the banking program will lay the foundation for the best banking system in America from the point of view of stability and at the same time would do more to secure the local control of our own money than has ever heretofore been suggested anywhere.

A very profound student of life once said that any man who enters public service must elect as to whether he is for or against things as they are. I intend that there should be no doubt as to where I stand. So far as I am concerned, in or out of public life, alone or with others, I am in this fight until the control of the monopoly system over the lives of the people of this country is broken and the American ideal and tradition of political, religious, and economic liberty is reestablished.

I am fully aware that the program that we have heretofore adopted and that is herein recommended challenges the monopoly system at its foundation. I know the power of that system. I know what it can do to the public and even private lives of men who challenge it. I know the attacks, subtle, open, and under cover, to which everyone of you will be subjected.

You will be assailed. They will say that you are destructive, although they offer no alternatives themselves. They will tell you that the Government can not put 5,000,000 men to work, although they forget that they put 4,000,000 American young men to work at the business of war; that they squandered $40,000,000,000 of American money in the most wasteful and futile war of modern history. And still they will say that you are extravagant and wasteful and visionary because you propose to spend millions or billions to build highways and bridges and power plants that will make the farmer's and the worker's life better and happier; you may spend tens of billions to destroy—but nothing to build a richer life.

To fight this fight you give up security, you give up peace; you may give up your homes, your businesses, and your occupations. And what can you expect in return? Only the inner satisfaction that if you are successful you will have helped to remake the life of America; that you will have been a part of a determined effort to live up to the highest and noblest traditions of our fathers; that the scars and wounds that you have received and will receive came in a great cause, the age-old struggle of mankind to build a better world.

Respectfully submitted.

PHILIP F. LA FOLLETTE,
Governor.

House Joint Memorial 12, a memorial to the President of the United States and to the Senate of the United States pertaining to stabilization of silver.

Whereas there was introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator KEY PITTMAN, of Nevada, on February 11, 1931, Senate Resolutions Nos. 442 and 443; and

Whereas there was filed with the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate on the same day a report by a subcommittee of that committee, which report discloses that the price of silver is now around 26 cents per ounce, as against a normal average price over many years of around 60 cents per ounce; and which report is an exhaustive study of silver, its use, its markets, consumption, production, and all other aspects of the present silver situation, and which report goes searchingly into the cause of the present decline in price, and recommends, through the above-mentioned two United States Senate Resolutions Nos. 442 and 443, a method of restoring silver to its normal value and stabilizing its price; and

Whereas the State of Arizona ranks fourth among the States of the United States in the production of silver and produces over 11 per cent of the total silver production of the United States; and

Whereas the silver values in small lots of ore shipped by prospectors in this State are of vital importance to them in enabling them to continue work; and

Whereas the present depressed price of silver has caused the cessation of work in many such prospective mines, and thus is seriously retarding the further development of Arizona's greatest industry: It is therefore

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Tenth Legislature of the State of Arizona (the State senate concurring therein), That we consider this silver situation of vital interest to our State;

That we have the utmost confidence in the report and recommendations of the subcommittee, of which Senator KEY PITTMAN is chairman;

That we urge the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to favorably report on the two resolutions offered by their subcommittee;

That we urge the Senate of the United States to pass these resolutions; and

That we respectfully urge the President of the United States to act expeditiously upon the Senate's hoped-for recommendations, to the end that silver may be restored to its normal status; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Arizona is authorized and directed to forward copies of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate, and to the Senators and Representative in Congress from this State.

Adopted by the senate February 19, 1931.
Approved by the governor February 19, 1931.

House Joint Memorial 6

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Tenth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, respectfully represents:

That the area of land within the State of Arizona is 72,838,400 acres, of which area 19,566,339 acres are within Indian reservations, 16,911,367 are within the United States public domain, 11,203,438 are within the national forests, 671,610 are within national parks and monuments, and 73,008 are within military reservations; that a total of two-thirds the area of land within the State of Arizona is controlled by Federal bureaus and can not be taxed for State purposes.

That 6,498,669 acres are owned by the State, subject to Federal regulations as to their sale, etc.

That 17,913,969 acres, or less than one-quarter of the land of the State, is subject to taxation.

That during the 18 years of Arizona statehood the lands reserved from entry by the Federal Government have increased, especially the Indian reservations.

That instead of the Secretary of the Interior's advertised policy of turning lands over to the State being followed, the efforts of Washington bureaus have been directed to control more of the lands and all of the waters of the State.

Whereas the public domain of the United States has an area of about 178,000,000 acres, distributed among 17 States;

Whereas it is overwhelmingly the public sentiments of the people of Arizona that all the public domain, reserved lands, and all national monuments owned by the United States, within the State of Arizona, should be transferred to the State of Arizona;

Whereas the transferring of all the lands of the United States to the State of Arizona would result in a more immediate development and exploration and exploitation thereof;

Whereas the States within which the lands of the United States are located are nearer to the people than the Federal Government, and the administration of such lands, under the governments of the respective States, would be closer to the people;

Whereas the State of Arizona is willing, through its elected officials, to take over all lands of the United States within its borders and administer the same, equitably and according to well-defined methods, consonant with and agreeable to the general historical policy of the United States, with regard to the distribution of public lands in a manner that will be just to all States and all citizens of the United States;

Wherefore your memorialist, the Tenth Legislature of the State of Arizona in regular session assembled, urgently requests Congress to enact such legislation as will effectually transfer to the State of Arizona all the public domain, reserved lands, and all other lands belonging to the United States, including all surface and subsurface, mineral and oil rights: It is hereby

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Arizona is authorized and directed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies thereof be sent to the Senators and Representative in Congress from this State.

Passed the house February 13, 1931.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

I, Scott White, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true and correct copy of House Joint Memorial No. 2 of the regular session of the tenth State legislature, 1931, entitled "House Joint Memorial No. 2, petitioning that Congress revise the copper schedule of the tariff law so as to bring domestic copper into price alignment with other domestic commodities and specifying fair rates to protect the copper industry in Arizona and the United States," all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 8th day of April, A. D. 1931.

House Joint Memorial 2

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Tenth Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents:

1. Copper mining is one of the leading industries of many of the Western States. Upon it these States are in great measure dependent for their prosperity and large numbers of their citizens for a livelihood. In this State the industry is of the first magnitude. Its importance can scarcely be exaggerated. The copper mines of Arizona produce almost as much copper as all other States of the Union combined. They represent approximately one-half of our taxable wealth. In their operation there is annually distributed, chiefly within Arizona, about $70,000,000 for labor, supplies, transportation, and taxes. They afford a convenient and profitable market for the produce of Arizona farms, orchards, and ranches. They provide employment and a means of livelihood for many thousands of citizens, whose earnings contribute materially to the wealth of the State. Their successful operation stimulates the further search for mineral deposits and encourages prospecting, so essential to the perpetuation of the copper-mining industry.

2. The effect upon Arizona and its people of the destruction of such an industry, or even of its temporary depression, must be at once apparent—curtailed revenues for the maintenance of government, widespread unemployment, depletion or complete loss of the life earnings of thousands of miners, privation in their homes, lessened or utterly destroyed buying power, business paralysis, closing of an important outlet for agricultural products, economic loss and suffering to all classes of citizens, and the creation of a serious problem for the State government.

3. Thus is presented a situation which has been developing in Arizona for the past eight years. During this evil time for the copper-mining industry the number of active copper-mining districts in this State has decreased 80 per cent, and the smelter fires are still going out. It is needless to say that the industry is in a most precarious condition. What has been said of copper mining in Arizona is true of the industry wherever it exists in the United States.

4. The reasons for this condition are to be found to a limited extent only in the general financial and industrial depression from which our Nation has recently suffered and still is suffering. They have a much more easily definable and far more serious source. They may be found primarily in the tremendous copper-ore reserves of Africa, South America, Canada, and Mexico, estimated to exceed this country's ore reserves in volume and grade three times over; in the slave labor of equatorial Africa and the impressed Indian labor of South America with which the great ore bodies of these countries are worked; and in the bringing of this cheaply produced copper duty free into direct competition with the copper produced in the United States. Looking deeper, the reasons may be found in the circumstance that the principal copper interests of this country, controlling approximately 90 per cent of the copper mined in four of the leading western copper-producing States and controlling likewise the copper-fabricating industry, also control huge copper reserves in the foreign countries named, with mine and smelter capacities sufficient to supply this country's requirements and to control its copper market. They may be found in the obvious purpose of the interests holding this almost universal control of the copper industry of the world to supply their fabrication industry with cheap raw material from their foreign ore reserves, unhampered and undeterred by any tariff requirements, to the exclusion of the nonprotected copper of this country, while enjoying, on the other hand, the advantage of high protection for their fabricated product. They may be found in the fact that although during the past 11 years the production of copper in this country has exceeded domestic consumption by only 12¾ per cent, and during the past 8 years by only about 1 per cent, and that henceforth the home market is undoubtedly capable of absorbing at least 90 per cent of the domestic copper, the legitimate benefits of this advantage are, because of the unequal economic conditions under which domestic and foreign copper is produced, denied to the copper-mining industry of the United States.

5. The discrimination shown in existing tariff laws, by which the copper-fabricating industry is highly favored while the copper-mining industry is permitted to languish and die, is nothing short of startling. The copper manufacturer is liberally protected on every article of fabricated copper, and enjoys the advantage of a differential of as high as 11 cents per pound merely as converting compensation. The home market is reserved for his sole and exclusive benefit, with advantages so great that he is able to compete in every country with the fabricated copper products of the world. But the basic producer, the man who takes this copper—this elementary, foundation product—out of the ground; who finds it, mines it, and converts it into a finished, refined copper ingot, and delivers it to the manufacturer, is not only forced to sell his product in competition with the cheap-labor copper of other countries but he is compelled to buy every appliance and every item which enters into the cost of that product in a protected market at a swollen price.

6. This discrimination is as unjust as it is startling—as economically unsound as it is unfair. The business of domestic copper mining, considered solely as a business, has a moral right, not inferior to that of the many commercial enterprises based upon other highly protected metals and alloys, to live and prosper. As an essential industry, vital to the welfare of this Nation both in peace and war, its vast importance is self-evident.

7. By every law of justice the copper-mining industry should again be afforded the protection it first received as early as 1846, and which it enjoyed until 1894, when it was able to meet foreign competition both at home and in the markets of the world. By every rule of economic wisdom the copper miner of the West should be kept at work, the market created by his activities kept open, exploration encouraged, the prospector kept scanning the hills, untouched ore areas opened and developed, and the domestic copper-ore reserves constantly maintained.

8. Without protection against the competition of foreign copper ores, this can not be done. There is an inescapable difference of 6 cents between the price at which foreign copper may be laid down in this country and the cost of producing it at home, to the disadvantage of the domestic product. That figure represents the minimum of protection necessary before the copper miner of the United States can hope to compete with copper produced by the slave labor of Africa and the native Indian labor of South America, or be assured of enjoying the benefits of his home market.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Tenth Legislature of the State of Arizona, prays:

1. That Congress, at the earliest practicable date, revise the copper schedules of the tariff law in such manner and to such extent as to bring domestic copper into price alignment with highly protected fabricated copper, as well as with the thousands of protected domestic commodities of all kinds, that the copper miner is compelled, in common with other American citizens, to buy.

2. That a measure of protection be afforded to copper produced in this country sufficient to enable the domestic copper miner to realize the benefits of his home market, and which will place his product on a parity with foreign copper.

3. That such protection be established at approximately the following rates: For copper in ingots, pigs, plates, or bars, not manufactured, and copper in any form not officially provided for, 6 cents per pound; all alloys or combinations of copper not specially provided for, 6 cents per pound on the copper contained therein; blister copper, regulus, matte, cement copper, and black or coarse copper, 5 cents per pound on the copper contained therein; old copper, scrap copper, fit only for manufacture, copper scale, and clippings from new copper, 5 cents per pound on the copper contained therein; copper ore and flotation or milled copper concentrate, containing 30 per cent or more of metallic copper, 5 cents per pound on the metallic copper contained therein; or if containing less than 30 per cent of metallic copper, 4 cents per pound on the metallic copper contained therein.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Your memorialist, the Tenth State Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, respectfully represents:

That the adjusted compensation (bonus) act passed by Congress in 1924, granted to World War veterans' insurance certificates to mature in 20 years or at death of the veteran;

That many veterans now facing the sunset of life will not live to enjoy the benefits of said compensation act;

House Joint Memorial 9

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The Tenth State Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, requests consideration of the following:

Whereas the natural wild-lift resources (including wild game, fur-bearing animals, insectivorous mammals and birds, and many other species of scientific, educational, and recreational interest) of the State of Arizona and the Southwest are already recognized as constituting an important present and future asset; and

Whereas there exist in the State of Arizona and the Southwest many problems of regulation of numbers of such species as flesh-eating animals predatory on livestock and game, and plant-eating rodents detrimental to farm, forage, and forest; and

Whereas the proper management of wild-life resources, whether neutral, harmful, or beneficial, is intimately related to important problems in farming, stock raising, recreational development, forestry, soil conservation, and maintenance of watershed; and

Whereas the proper management of these natural resources is absolutely dependent on a full and accurate knowledge of the lives and habits of wild life, which knowledge can only be provided by long-time studies by specialists possessing advanced training in biological sciences and experience in practical field conditions, and who should be equipped with all needful laboratory space and scientific apparatus for the prosecution of their studies; and

Whereas a considerable proportion of the surface area of the Southwestern States (Arizona, 71 per cent; New Mexico, 38 per cent) is Government land, carrying with it some Federal responsibility for adequate conservation of its natural resources; and

Whereas the State and private institutions of Arizona, including the University of Arizona, the Arizona Game and Fish Commission, the Boyce Thompson Southwestern Arboretum, Arizona Game Protective Association, Carnegie Institution of Washington, and especially the University of Arizona and the Arizona Game and Fish Commission, have already demonstrated in numerous concrete ways their cooperative attitude and aggressive interest in the building up of a proper scientific foundation for every pertinent phase of wild-life management, but are obviously unable to finance the expanded investigations absolutely needful for proper development: Therefore, your memorialist, the Tenth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session assembled, urgently requests Congress to authorize and appropriate the sum of $25,000 for the immediate establishment by the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture of a southwestern wild-life experiment station, at or near the University of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz., to undertake the necessary researches.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

To the honorable the President of the United States and the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The Tenth State Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, requests consideration of the following:

Whereas the buffalo herd located in House Rock Valley, Ariz., is the only State-owned buffalo herd in the United States; and

Whereas it is proposed to introduce a bill in Congress setting aside from the public lands of the United States approximately 44,000 acres in what is known as the House Rock Valley of Arizona for the purpose of establishing the so-called House Rock Valley Game Refuge to maintain and conserve the herd of buffalo formerly owned by C. J. (Buffalo) Jones and sold by his successor, Uncle Jimmie Owens, to the State of Arizona for $10,000, it being the desire of the State to fence and develop water on this tract of land and to increase this herd from the present number of 97 to 250, and to also put in this proposed preserve a band of antelope, up to 250 in number; and

Whereas the following described area is the piece or parcel of land required for said game refuge: Beginning at the corner of sections 7, 8, 17, and 18, T. 37 N., R. 4 E., on the boundary of the Kaibab National Forest; thence easterly along the north boundaries of sections 17, 16, 15, 14, and 13 of said township and the north boundaries of sections 18, 17, 16, 15, and 14, T. 37 N., R. 5 E., to the north rim of North Canyon at a point approximately 20.20 chains west of the corner of sections 11, 12, 13, and 14; thence northeasterly along the north rim of the North Canyon to the west rim of Marble Canyon of the Colorado River; thence southwesterly across the mouth of the North Canyon and along the west rim of said Marble Canyon to the north rim of the South Canyon, approximately in unsurveyed section 21, T. 36 N., R. 5 E.; thence northwesterly along the north rim of South Canyon to the line between sections 18 and 19, approximately 12.89 chains west of the corner of sections 17, 18, 19, and 20, T. 36 N., R. 5 E.; thence westerly along the south boundary of section 18, T. 36 N., R. 5 E.; thence following the boundary of the Kaibab National Forest westerly along the south boundaries of sections

Whereas the Tenth State Legislatue of the State of Arizona heartily approves this project and prays Congress that this proposed refuge be established under the management and control of the State of Arizona as a free gift from the United States Government for this purpose.

Whereas there are at this time being imported into the United States large quantities of a variety of products produced by Russian convict labor; and

Whereas the importation and distribution of such products are extremely detrimental to the sale of American free labor produced products in the United States; and

Whereas as a result the economic and financial stability of some of the leading American industries and interests are being threatened: Now, therefore, be it

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Sacramento, Calif., April 23, 1931.

To the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of California:

I am directed to inform you that the California Legislature has adopted the following Senate Joint Resolution No. 17 (by Senator Allen) relative to memorializing Congress to provide compensation in lieu of taxes for certain lands of the United States within the borders of the several States:

Whereas the United States Government has withdrawn and set apart within permanent national parks or forests enormous tracts of land, approximately 19,000,000 acres in the State of California alone; and

Whereas, among other reasons, this has been made possible by the owners of timberland trading in their "cut-over" lands to the Government for selected "cuttings"; and

Whereas the United States Government pays no taxes on such lands, resulting in throwing a heavy tax burden on privately owned property in the same political subdivision: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and assembly, jointly, That Congress is urgently requested to appropriate sufficient money so that a sum of 5 cents per acre per year may be paid in lieu of taxes to the political subdivisions in which such lands belonging to the United States are situated; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each of the Members from California of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

Whereas the original historic name of said island is more euphonious and in keeping with the nomenclature of historic landmarks in California and no good reason appears for the change which has been made: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to said National Geographic Board at Washington, D. C.

CHAPTER 38

Senate Joint Resolution 12.—Relative to memorializing Congress to make an emergency appropriation as a loan to the Federal reclamation fund

Whereas there is not now available in the Federal reclamation fund an adequate amount to carry on the construction and betterment on many reclamation projects approved by Congress and now in process of construction; and

Whereas such lack of funds necessitates the discontinuance of work thereon until such time as said reclamation fund may be augmented by the different sources of income thereto; and

Whereas the prevailing economic depression throughout the Nation may cause considerable time to elapse before the income to said reclamation fund will be adequate to permit the continuance of work on the various reclamation projects; and

Whereas said delay in the continuation of construction on such projects will add considerable to the cost of those projects now under construction, loss to settlers now on the projects awaiting an initial or additional water supply, and tend to add to the general economic depression in many localities in our Western States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California most respectfully urges the Congress of the United States of America to make an emergency appropriation of $5,000,000 as a loan to the reclamation fund; and his excellency, the Governor of the State of California, be requested to forward to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a properly certified copy of this resolution

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

SENATE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT, STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Sacramento, Calif., March 5, 1931.

To the President of the United States, to the Secretary of War, to each House of Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of California:

I am directed to inform you that the California Legislature has adopted the following:

Senate Joint Resolution 11 (by Senators Sharkey, Nelson, Ingels, Slater, McCormack, Fellom, Maloney, and Tubbs). Relative to accepting permit from the Government of the United States for the construction of approach roads and toll-collection areas over certain rights of way leading to the Golden Gate Bridge and relating to the retrocession by the Congress of the United States of jurisdiction over the said rights of way, approach roads, toll areas, bridge ends, and bridge

Whereas the Secretary of War of the United States has by grant dated the 13th day of February, 1931, granted the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District certain rights of way upon which are to be located the approach roads, toll areas, and bridge ends of the proposed Golden Gate Bridge; and

Whereas the said grant is by its terms granted in lieu of and supersedes the permit to the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District dated October 27, 1930; and

Whereas the said permit dated the 13th day of February, 1931, requires as a condition precedent to the taking effect of such permit that the State of California accept the same and conform to certain other requirements therein contained: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the said permit granted by the Secretary of War to Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District be, and the same hereby is, together with each, all, every, and singular the terms, conditions, limitations, reservations, and requirements therein contained, accepted by and on behalf of the State of California; and be it further

Resolved, That the State of California does hereby make application to Congress for a retrocession of jurisdiction over the rights of way, toll areas, bridge ends, and the bridge itself to be constructed across the Golden Gate Bridge at the mouth of San Francisco Bay, and mentioned, described, and designated in that certain grant from the Secretary of War to the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District dated February 13, 1931; and be it further

Resolved, That the State of California will, in case such retrocession of jurisdiction is granted by Congress, accept such retrocession of jurisdiction, and will assume the responsibility for managing, controlling, policing, and regulating traffic thereon, all subject to the following limitations and to such other limitations as Congress may prescribe:

(a) That nothing in said permit contained shall be construed to give to the State of California, or any of its agents, authority at any time to regulate traffic of military personnel or vehicles upon the said bridge or roads. All traffic upon said roads and upon said bridge shall be free from any tolls, charges, or any form of obstruction by State or other agencies against military and naval personnel and their dependents, civilians of the Army and Navy traveling on Government business under military authority, and Government traffic.

(b) That whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of War or his authorized representative any emergency exists which justifies it he may assume exclusive control and management of said bridge and roads and may then in his discretion prohibit, limit, or regulate traffic thereon.

(c) That nothing in said permit contained shall be construed to confer upon the State courts the right to try persons subject to military law for crimes or offenses committed on said roads or upon said bridge within the boundaries of the respective military reservations involved, but the courts of the United States or military tribunals, as now or hereafter provided by law, shall retain exclusive jurisdiction to try such persons for such offenses.

Be it further resolved, That the State of California does hereby agree to make the bridge and highways and toll areas in said permit described a part of the system of public highways of the State; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of War, to each House of Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of California.

Assembly joint Resolution 12.—Relative to memorializing Congress to enact certain legislation now pending granting travel pay and allowances to certain soldiers of the Spanish-American War and Philippine insurrection who were discharged in the Philippines.

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States of America a bill (H. R. 7930) providing that soldiers who enlisted in the Regular Army in 1898 for the duration of the war with Spain, who were discharged in the Philippines, who did not reenter the military service there, and who embarked from Manila within one year after discharge, be allowed travel pay and commutation of subsistence for a period not exceeding three months during which they awaited transportation by Government transport, less any sums heretofore paid by the Government by way of such travel pay and commutation of subsistence; and

Whereas such legislation is in all respects just and desirable: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States of America be hereby memorialized and earnestly urged to enact said bill, and the President and Vice President be likewise memorialized and urged to support said bill; and be it further

CHAPTER 96

Assembly Joint Resolution 17.—Relative to memorializing and petitioning Congress to enact legislation transferring certain oil lands in Kern County, Calif., from the jurisdiction of the Navy Department to the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior

Whereas on September 27, 1909, by presidential Executive order of that date, certain lands in Kern County, Calif., were withdrawn from entry and, by presidential Executive order of September 2, 1912, naval petroleum reserve No. 2 was created therefrom embracing originally 31,181 acres, of which 19,620 acres were or have been patented to private parties and 9,991 acres have been leased to private parties for operation and are being operated under the provisions of the general leasing act of February 25, 1920 (c. 85, 41 Stats. 450), and 570 acres remain unleased; and

Whereas section 35 of the said general leasing act provides that 37½ per cent of all amounts derived by the Federal Government from bonuses, royalties, and rentals on leased oil or gas lands or deposits within the public domain shall be paid at stated intervals by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State within the boundaries of which such leased lands or deposits are located, for the use by said State or the subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, and that all moneys accruing to the Federal Government from bonuses, royalties, and rentals from naval petroleum reserve lands shall be deposited in the United States Tresaury as miscellaneous receipts; and

Whereas neither the State of California nor Kern County, Calif., nor the Navy Department of the United States receives any benefit from or part of the amounts derived by the Federal Government from bonuses, royalties, or rentals on said lands within said naval petroleum reserve No. 2: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California earnestly memorializes and petitions Congress to enact legislation transferring the aforesaid lands now within naval petroleum reserve No. 2 from the jurisdiction of the Navy Department to the public domain under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, and to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States.

Assembly Joint Resolution 25.—Relative to requesting the Secretary of the Navy to name the dirigible ZRS–5; to be stationed at the Sunnyvale air base "Palo Alto"

Whereas the Federal Government pursuant to an act of Congress is to erect at Sunnyvale, Calif., a naval dirigible base at which will be stationed the navy dirigible ZRS–5; and

Whereas it is desirous that a name be selected for the dirigible ZRS–5 to be stationed at the said base that will be typical of California and in harmony with the location of the base; and

Whereas it is the opinion of the Legislature of the State of California that "Palo Alto" would be a fitting and proper name to carry out the sentiment herein expressed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly and senate, jointly, That the Secretary of the Navy is respectfully urged and requested to name the dirigible ZRS–5 to be stationed at the Sunnyvale dirigible base, "Palo Alto"; and be it further

CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE, ASSEMBLY CHAMBER,
FORTY-NINTH SESSION,
Sacramento.

Please note the following joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of California April 21, 1931:

CHAPTER 44

Assembly Joint Resolution 16.—Relative to memorializing United States Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde to rescind his order of December 26, 1930, with regard to the labeling of food products containing corn sugar

Whereas on December 26, 1930, United States Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde issued the following order:

"Corn sugar (dextrose), when sold in packages, must be labeled as such; when sold in bulk, must be declared as such; but the use of pure refined corn sugar as an ingredient in the packing, preparation, or processing of any article of food in which sugar is a recognized element need not be declared upon the label of any such product.

"Nothing in this ruling shall be construed to permit the adulteration or imitation of any natural product, such as honey, by the addition of any sugar or other ingredient whatever"; and

Whereas research by the laboratories of the California State Board of Health and elsewhere indicates that corn sugar has entirely different properties from cane or beet sugar (chemically known as sucrose), and also has materially less sweetening power; and

Whereas cane or beet sugar have been used for generations in the home and commercially as the natural sweetening for foods, and that the consumer expects this sugar to be used in these products; and

Whereas, in view of the above facts, Secretary Hyde's order will mislead the consuming public as to the contents of manufactured food products; and

Whereas Secretary Hyde's ruling thereby disregards one of the fundamental principles of the Federal food law, which is that the public shall not be deceived or misled as to the contents of any package of food: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the United States Secretary of Agriculture, Arthur M. Hyde, be hereby memorialized and earnestly urged to rescind said order; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed forthwith to transmit this resolution to Secretary Hyde, to the President of the United States, and to the Members of Congress.

Assembly Joint Resolution 18.—Relating to an immediate survey of forest insect conditions and for the control of forest insects

Whereas the forests of California are seriously threatened with great losses due to the activities of bark beetles and other forest insects; and

Whereas in parts of California forest insects have killed over one-half of all commercial timber with annual losses in excess of 10 per cent of the entire stand; and

Whereas forest insects also threaten timber of high value in recreational areas, having in past years killed all timber on some 20,000 acres within the Yosemite National Park; and

Whereas forest-insect losses are always greatest in years of deficient rainfall; and

Whereas California is now confronted with a year of subnormal precipitation; and

Whereas in past years funds for forest-insect control have been largely diverted to use in other States in protecting timber of less value than timber in California; and

Whereas the United States owns many millions of acres of timberlands in California, upon which lands the insects are causing heavy losses to timber; and

Whereas the owners of private lands adjoining such Federal lands are unable to control forest insects unless the Federal Government also carries on control work; and

Whereas for the control of forest insects there are now available Federal funds that have not yet been allotted to other States; it is

Resolved by the assembly and the senate, jointly, That $100,000 of the Federal fund should be allotted to California for making an immediate survey of forest insect conditions and for the control of forest insects where the survey shows the work to be most needed; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chief Forester of the United States, who has the authority to make the above allotment, be, and hereby is, urged to make the allotment to California; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture and to the Chief Forester of the United States.

I, Chas. M. Armstrong, Secretary of State of the State of Colorado, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete copy of House Concurrent Resolution No. 9, which was filed in this office on the 28th day of April, A. D. 1931, at 12.15 o'clock p. m.

House Concurrent Resolution 9 (by Representatives Graham and England, and Senators Talbot, Evans, Ryan, and Quiat) ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age

Whereas the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States of America, at its first session, in both Houses, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, has made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress."

Therefore be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolution be forwarded by the Governor of the State of Colorado to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

House Joint Memorial 2 (by Representatives Fisher, Twining, Waters, Hoefnagels, Barrick, Mowatt, and Holman) to the United States Congress reestablishing some monetary value to silver

Whereas the depression affecting the business and economic life of the United States is not alone confined to this country but extends into all parts of the world, and in the minds of all the great economists of this generation it is attributable, directly or indirectly, to a greater or less extent, to the lack of flexibility in the monetary systems of the various nations; and

Whereas for many years there has been a pronounced effort on the part of England, Germany, France, and other nations of the world who heretofore controlled the gold and necessarily the credit of the world to do everything possible to bring about a world-wide single gold standard and demonetize silver in many countries where silver was and still is practically the only circulating medium of exchange, all of which has seriously impaired the buying power of a vast majority of the population of the entire world, and has as a result destroyed the market for many of the products manufactured in this and other countries; and

Whereas a large part of the available gold of the world is now controlled by the United States, France, and England, and is wholly insufficient to meet the demands of commerce, and unless and until a monetary value is restored in silver international commerce will continue to be seriously impaired; and

Whereas practice has shown that there is no disparity of value between gold and silver coins where they have been heretofore used as the circulating medium of a country and such disparity will not occur in the use of gold and silver coins of any country until such country shall coin silver dollars to an extent where they will supply the total metallic money required by such country; and right now the United States of America is the greatest creditor Nation of the world, and the debtor nations, constituting the great powers of the world, are unable to make payments in gold, and the United States would be in a far better position in reviving commercial relations with other countries and stimulating the commerce of the world to accept payment of such indebtedness in silver as well as gold; and

Whereas the international payments as between the nations of the world have for a long time been fluctuating erratically, due to the constant change in the value of silver, and it would be to the advantage of the commerce of all nations of the world to have definitely established an international exchange ratio between gold and silver, which can readily be done by establishing a fixed value for silver as compared with that of gold, and the time is opportune for any great creditor nation to adopt, or be instrumental in adopting internationally, some form of bimetallic standard under which the gold and silver can be coined at the mints upon some practicable ratio: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-eighth General Assembly of the State of Colorado respectfully memorializes and petitions the Congress of the United States of America to enact as speedily as possible proper legislation reestablishing some monetary value to silver in this country and thereby restore silver to a use as money, or as a basis for the issuance of silver certificates to pass as money, and admit the silver of the world, or at least what is produced in the United States, to coinage in the mints of the United States on the basis of 20 to 1 as compared with gold; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the Senators and Representatives of Colorado in Congress.

House Joint Memorial 3 (by Representatives Barrick, Twining, Fisher, Waters, Hoefnagels, Mowatt, Holman, and Edwards)

Whereas the depression affecting the business and economic life of the United States is not alone confined to this country but extends into all parts of the world, and in the minds of all the great economists of this generation it is attributable, directly or indirectly, to a greater or less extent to the lack of flexibility in the monetary systems of the various nations; and

Whereas the demonetization of silver and its discontinuance as a standard of value in parity with gold was the beginning of the decline of the silver-mining industry in this State and elsewhere in this country, and it has become increasingly evident that the present depressing economic condition throughout the world is occasioned in a large measure thereby: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by joint resolutions of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, First, that Resolution No. 442, introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator KEY PITTMAN, of Nevada, advising the President of the United States to take the action therein set out relative to the dumping of silver on the markets of the world derived from melting up of silver coins and, in addition, to call or obtain an international conference looking to an agreement or understanding with regard to the use and status of silver as money be, and is hereby, indorsed; and be it further

Resolved, That Resolution No. 443, introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator KEY PITTMAN, of Nevada, advising the President of the United States to consider the practicability of the United States Government, alone or in connection with other governments, establishing a silver pool or fund for advancement of silver to the National Government of China for coinage and use for specific purposes be, and is hereby, indorsed; and be it further

Resolved, That the report of the subcommittee, of which Senator KEY PITTMAN is chairman, filed with the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate be, and is hereby, indorsed; and be it further

Resolved, That the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate is respectfully urged to report favorably the foregoing resolutions to the United States Senate and that the United States Senate is respectfully urged to pass said resolution and that the President of the United States is respectfully urged to carry out such resolutions as expeditiously as possible; and be it further

In the House of Representatives. House Joint Memorial 4 (by Industry Committee)

To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that:

Whereas a very great portion of the area drained by the upper courses of the Snake River and its tributaries lies within the boundaries of States other than the State of Idaho and within forest reserves and national parks over all of which the State of Idaho has and can exercise no jurisdiction or control whatsoever; and

Whereas the sources of the Snake River and its upper tributaries are in high mountainous altitudes wherein snow falls and accumulates to great depths each winter, the melting of which in the spring and early summer of each year causes destructive floodings of farm lands lying along and adjacent to such river; and

Whereas great damage is annually done to such farm lands and the crops growing thereon and to the other property of the farmers owning and residing upon such river bottom lands; and

Whereas farms are damaged and in some instances ruined by the changing of the channel of this river, caused by the great volume of water flowing therein from melting snows and spring rains; and

Whereas such freshet conditions are growing worse from year to year by reason of the removal and destruction of the timber, underbrush, and vegetation therefrom as this drainage area becomes more thickly populated, and the State of Idaho is unable to control such removal and destruction of timber, underbrush, and other vegetation because of lack of jurisdiction; and

Whereas for a number of years the State of Idaho, the counties lying along and through which the Snake River in its upper courses flows, and the individuals owning lands subject to flooding and other damage by the freshets of each year have expended large sums of money in endeavoring to minimize the damages caused by such freshets with but meager success; and

Whereas the building of flood-control dams and other works along this portion of the channel of this stream is the only means by which complete mastery of this very destructive flood condition can be attained; and

Whereas neither the State of Idaho nor the counties of the State are able, either alone or together, to undertake and complete a work of such magnitude and which is largely outside of their territorial jurisdiction; and

Whereas the Government of the United States is now engaged in building works to overcome like conditions in other portions of the country, notably in the Mississippi Valley: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring), That we, your memorialists, urgently request that investigations be made of the conditions herein recited and that proper legislation be enacted and appropriations of adequate funds be made by the Congress of the United States to construct such flood dams and other works as will effect complete control of these very damaging and destructive freshets: Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized and is hereby directed to furnish and forward to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Idaho copies of this memorial.

This house joint memorial passed the house on the 4th day of March, 1931.

C. A. BOTTOLFSEN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This house joint memorial passed the senate on the 5th day of March, 1931.

I, Fred E. Lukens, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 8 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Twenty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Idaho, and filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Idaho March 7, 1931, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

IN THE SENATE.

Senate Joint Memorial 8 (by Leslie)

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent—

Whereas the future growth and prosperity of north Idaho, and especially Boundary County, is of vital importance in connection with the maintenance and the security of its dikes in the reclamation and drainage of large areas of unproductive swamp lands now reclaimed along the Kootenai River, a large navigable stream; and

Whereas the said Kootenai River is now filled with snags, trees, and débris which are brought down from the higher altitudes in its flood stage and are deposited in the more sluggish portions of the said river, thereby causing an erosion of the banks as well as changing the course of the river, which vitally endangers the reclamation already established, upon which millions of dollars have already been spent, and lands protected by said dikes which are now in a high state of cultivation and which are now turning a revenue to the State of Idaho through its production of millions of dollars of agricultural products annually; and

Whereas the said conditions could be remedied by clearing the channel of the logs, trees, and other débris, thereby insuring to the public the free use of the said river for navigation and the protection of its dikes along its banks; and

Whereas the Kootenai River Valley is now producing millions of dollars' worth of grain and other agricultural products; and

Whereas the said river is a large navigable stream and under the jurisdiction of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Idaho hereby requests that an appropriation be made for the necessary work for the clearing of the said Kootenai River in Boundary County, Idaho; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho is hereby instructed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and that copies hereof be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 24th day of February, 1931.

G. P. MIX,
President of the Senate.

This senate joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 27th day of February, 1931.

C. A. BOTTOLFSEN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within Senate Joint Memorial No. 8 originated in the senate during the Twenty-first session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

CARL C. KITCHEN,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas economic authorities in the United States and Canada, acting officially both as joint commissions and severally, have repeatedly and unanimously declared that enlarging the connecting channels of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River to admit uninterrupted movement of ocean-borne commerce from and into the Great Lakes, is economically sound and necessary to raise the competitive position, establish economic equality, permit future development, and effect the return of prosperity to the vast continental areas of both countries; and

Whereas over the past five years diplomatic correspondence has brought the two nations into agreement on the assignment of tasks and division of costs, said correspondence having allocated to the United States the construction and cost of all improvements in international waters—which includes the deepening to 27 feet of the connecting channels of the upper Great Lakes, a new lock at the Soo corresponding in dimensions to the locks in the New Welland Ship Canal, and the improvement of the international stretch of the St. Lawrence River from Lake Ontario to the 45th parallel (opposite Cornwall), where the river ceases to form the boundary line between the two countries, and allocating to Canada the completion of the New Welland Ship Canal and the improvement of the river from the 45th parallel aforesaid to the sea; and

Whereas approximately one-half of the tasks assigned to each Government has either been completed, is in process of completion, or already authorized by one or other of the two Governments, and approximately one-half of the total cost of the through seaway has either been expended, in process of being expended, or involved in authorizations already made, all of which has been carried out and is capable of being completed without any treaty; and

Whereas engineering authorities in Canada and the United States, acting officially both as joint boards and severally, have agreed upon engineering plans and costs and unanimously declared that the international rapids sections (48 miles) of the St. Lawrence River, extending from Ogdensburg to the international boundary, must, for economic reasons, be developed for navigation and power jointly; and

Whereas the State of New York, with the clear intent of delaying or obviating the completion of a through seaway via the St. Lawrence, and advancing a deep water route across the State of New York, has caused to be prepared engineering plans which if permitted to be carried out will under the most favorable conditions postpone through navigation 17 years, but predictably a generation, and in the meantime afford New York opportunity to transfer its barge canals to the Federal Government and under the pseudonym "all-American" embark the Government upon the staggering and almost useless expense of deepening or widening them for the passage of lake ships down to the port of New York for transfer to the ocean carrier, but not admitting the ocean ship to the Great Lakes, thus denying to midcontinental areas direct access to the sea; and

Whereas no development of this international rapids section of the river can be undertaken by either country or any agency in either country without an agreement or treaty appropriate thereto having first been entered into between Canada and the United States; and

Whereas the landlocked interior of the United States is deeply concerned and in emergent need of the relief which would accrue to that area by the opening of such seaway, and the citizens of New York State also are directly interested in the improvement and early utilization of the large reservoir of cheap power which would be made available by such joint development; and

Whereas the need exists for a formula or plan that will effect the development of this section of the river for navigation and power at the earliest possible date by employing the most practical, the most expeditious, and best agency or agencies for that purpose: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Iowa (the house concurring), That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to proceed to a treaty with Canada for the development of the aforesaid International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River at the earliest possible date, and in accordance with the plans agreed upon by the joint board of engineers, or such amendment to or changes in said plans as may be subsequently adopted by such joint board; and be it

Resolved, That in such improvement all permanent works, such as dams and navigation works, be constructed by the Governments of the United States and Canada, along the general lines of assignment of tasks and division of costs outlined in the correspondence between the two countries, but not the power house, superstructures, or installation of power machinery; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to enact the necessary preliminary legislation declaring all lands and the entire flow of the St. Lawrence River, extending from the shore to the international boundary line in the river, from Lake Ontario to the forty-fifth parallel, where the river ceases to form the boundary between the two nations, necessary for the purpose of navigation of said waters and the waters connected therewith.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was duly adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa on February 27, 1931.

[SEAL.] WALTER H. BEAM,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to pass Senate Joint Resolution 78, providing for the construction of a Washington-Lincoln memorial Gettysburg boulevard from the city of Washington to the battlefield of Gettysburg

Whereas a joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 78, has been introduced in the Senate of the United States, providing for the establishment of a commission for the construction of a Washington-Lincoln memorial boulevard, connecting the present Lincoln Memorial, in the city of Washington, with the battlefield of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennsylvania; and

Whereas the construction of such a memorial will further commemorate the public services of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States is most earnestly requested to pass said joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution No. 78; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Maryland be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit under the great seal of the State a copy of the aforegoing resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the representatives of Maryland in both Houses of Congress.

Approved April 17, 1931.

Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A joint resolution requesting the Congress to create a national military park on the battlefield of Monocacy to commemorate the battle fought there on July 9, 1864, whereby a Federal force under Gen. Lew Wallace delayed the march upon Washington by Gen. Jubal A. Early, in command of a Confederate force of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, and thereby saved the National Capital from capture and possible destruction

Whereas the sanguinary battle fought at Monocacy on July 9, 1864, between the Federal forces under Gen. Lew Wallace and the Confederate forces under Gen. Jubal A. Early caused a delay of at least 24 hours in Early's march upon Washington, and thereby enabled General Grant to send several divisions of seasoned Federal veterans to the defense of the city just in time to man the fortifications, then poorly and inadequately manned, before the arrival of the Confederate hosts bent upon the capture of the city; and

Whereas this delay of 24 hours, caused by the battle fought at Monocacy to impede the progress of the invading army toward the National Capital, saved the Capital from capture and all the direful consequences thereof, and has for that reason been denominated "one of the decisive battles of the world"; and

Whereas the valor displayed by the officers and men on both sides in that important conflict reflects honor and glory upon the citizen soldier of America, both North and South; and

Whereas the battlefield is located on the national highway from Washington to the West, over which many thousands of American citizens travel to and fro every year, and moreover is a picturesque spot, with the winding Monocacy flowing through it and adding to its beauty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memoralized and earnestly requested to create on the Monocacy Battlefield a national military park to commemorate the battle fought there on July 9, 1864, by which the Federal Capital was saved, and possibly the Union itself, and which would, if established, become a resting place and shrine where thousands of travelers and tourists could rest and renew their patriotism by a contemplation of the lofty deeds which have been wrought; of the great hearts which spent themselves there; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Maryland be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to transmit under the great seal of this State a copy of the aforegoing resolution to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the representatives from Maryland in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

Approved April 17, 1931.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1931.

Resolutions making application to Congress in accordance with Article V of the Constitution of the United States, to call a constitutional convention, to amend, or repeal the eighteenth article of amendment or to propose such an amendment for submission to the several States

Whereas a condition of widespread dissatisfaction prevails with the workings and results of Article XVIII of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas it is desirable to attempt to improve, clarify, or quiet such condition; and

Whereas the only methods for repealing or modifying said Article XVIII are set forth in Article V of the said Constitution: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts, acting in pursuance of said Article V, hereby requests that Congress call a convention under said article for the purpose of proposing an amendment or amendments to the Constitution amending, modifying, revising, or repealing said Article XVIII; or that Congress, acting in pursuance of said Article V, itself propose such an amendment or amendments; and requests that in either case the same be submitted for ratification by conventions in the several States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the commonwealth forward forthwith to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress certified copies of these resolutions attested by the clerks of both branches of the general court.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A resolution memorializing Congress to enact that certain bill now pending known as H. R. 16470, relating to the use of public funds for the purchase of oleomargarine

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a certain bill known as H. R. 16470, the purpose of which is to prohibit the use of oleomargarine in the Army and Navy and other agencies of the Federal Government; and

Whereas the major political parties during recent campaigns have pledged themselves to give agriculture the full protection of our domestic markets; and

Whereas the Federal Government is spending large amounts of money to help in the recovery of the markets for agricultural products; and

Whereas butter as a human food is recognized far superior to any article that may be used as a substitute for it; and

Whereas the enactment of such bill by Congress would be a very definite contribution toward restoring our dairy industry upon a sound basis, first, because of enlarging our domestic butter market, and, second, because of the moral supporting influence it would have, which is of great importance and far-reaching effect, and to which the dairy industry of our State and Nation feels they are entitled: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the senate concurring herein), That we do hereby respectfully petition and urge Congress to pass and enact said H. R. 16470; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to forward copy hereof to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, the chairman of the Committees on Agriculture of the Senate and House, respectively, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Minnesota in said Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass the Shipstead-Mansfield bill for the adequate financing and speedy completion of the river and harbor projects heretofore adopted by Congress (S. F. No. 512—Introduced by Messrs. Hausler, Nordlin, Anderson, and Loftsgaarden)

Whereas, by concurrent resolution approved February 27, 1929, and for economic reasons therein stated, the State of Minnesota appealed to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Congress of the United States to provide a 9-foot channel adequate to care for commercial river navigation on the upper Mississippi River; and

Whereas Congress responding to this appeal has recognized the economic necessity of a trade outlet to tidewater for the landlocked States of the mid-West, and by the act of July 3, 1930, has adopted a project for a 9-foot channel on the upper Mississippi River, but has made no adequate provision for financing its construction so that its benefits may be enjoyed by the present generation; and

Whereas the Special Board of United States Engineers, assigned to the survey of the upper Mississippi River, have found and reported that "industries have not located in this area because transportation costs, both on raw material and finished products, have been so high as to dictate their location elsewhere," and "the grain producer has had little choice but to sell at one price to the one market"; and

Whereas these conditions, now aggravated by a nation-wide depression, suggest the immediate employment of labor and industry in the construction of public and reproductive works; and

Whereas the Shipstead-Mansfield bill, now pending in Congress, provides for an internal loan to supplement annual budget appropriations for the adequate financing of all river and harbor projects already adopted by Congress, thus effecting a material saving in the primary cost of these works, hastening the date of their completion and beneficial enjoyment, and providing immediate employment for idle labor, idle industry, and idle capital: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memoralized and urgently requested to enact this bill into law, and that our Representatives in Congress be urged to support it and use all honorable means to procure its passage; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, attested by the proper officers of both houses, be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to each United States Senator and Member of Congress from the State of Minnesota.

Passed the senate the 17th day of February, 1931.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
Jackson.

I, Walker Wood, secretary of state of the State of Mississippi, do hereby certify that the within and attached is a true and correct copy of House Concurrent Resolution No. 7, passed by the Mississippi Legislature, extraordinary session, 1931, the enrolled act of which is now a matter of record in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Mississippi this the 12th day of October, 1931.

[SEAL.] WALKER WOOD,
Secretary of State.

House Concurren Resolution 7.—A concurrent resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States and the Federal Farm Board to declare a moratorium of one year on all seed and feed loans and drought relief loans due the United States Government by the farmers on loans made by said Government to the farmers, and memorializing Congress and the Federal Land Bank to declare a moratorium on loans made by said bank to farmers

Whereas it is a matter of record that the Government has declared a moratorium on debts due the United States from foreign countries on account of the depression existing in said foreign countries; and

Whereas this said moratorium was entered into in order to stimulate trade and benefit the general economic conditions of said foreign countries; and

Whereas the farmers of Mississippi are in a very critical financial condition, being faced with low-priced cotton; and

Whereas in a great many instances the price received for the cotton crop will not pay the fertilizer bills incurred in the growing of said crop; and

Whereas the burden of taxation is very heavy on the farmers by virtue of their inability to realize anything for the crop produced this year; and

Whereas it appears that in a great many cases, if the Government enforced the collection of these debts out of the proceeds of the present crop, a great many farms, because of this act, will have to be sold for taxes due; and

Whereas the condition of the farmers from an economic standpoint is as serious as the condition of these foreign countries from the said standpoint; and

Whereas it appears that the Government should be as lenient with her own people as it is concerning obligations due it by foreign countries; therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That the President and the Congress of the United States in conjunction with the Federal Farm Board, be, and they are hereby, memorialized to grant a moratorium of one year on the debts due by the farmers to the Government by virtue of the drought relief loan and the seed and feed loan advanced farmers by said Government, and that said indebtedness due said Government be not due until one year after the due date of the evidence of indebtedness held by said Government: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by registered mail to the President of the United States; to the Vice President of the United States, who by virtue of his office is President of the Senate; and to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives; and that a copy be forwarded to the Federal Farm Board, all and each in Washington, D. C.: Be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States and the Federal Land Bank be, and they are hereby, memorialized to declare a moratorium of one year on all loans made by said bank to farmers.

Adopted by the senate, October 7, 1931.

President of the Senate, Pro Tempore.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Joint Resolution 7.—A resolution requesting that Congress enact legislation providing for the taxation of the personal property of employees of military reservations

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Twenty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent—

Whereas many employees on military reservations, particularly reservations that are used for rehabilitation hospitals, protest against the payment of personal taxes; and

Whereas the members of the family of said employees enjoy the benefits of the community, particularly police protection, education, and the maintenance of highways; and

Whereas the burdens of these particular benefits to the community should be borne by all alike; be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this legislative assembly to the Congress of the United States that they should enact legislation that will provide for the respective States and counties to assess the personal effects of employees residing on reservations therein; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state to both the Senate and House of Representatives of the National Congress and to the Senators and Members of Congress from Montana.

Senate Joint Resolution 3.—A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to pass and the President to approve House Resolution 9599, by LEAVITT

Whereas there is now pending before the Seventy-first Congress, third session, House Resolution 9599 by LEAVITT, entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out his 10-year cooperative program for the eradication, suppression, or bringing under control of predatory and other wild animals injurious to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, animal husbandry, wild game, and other interests, and for the suppression of rabies and tularemia in predatory or other wild animals, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas the livestock and poultry raisers of Montana suffer a loss of thousands of dollars annually through stock and poultry being destroyed by predatory animals; and

Whereas the State of Montana is now spending large sums of money annually in the destruction of predatory animals for the protection of its livestock and poultry industries, which expenditures result beneficially to the preservation of the wild life in the national parks and Federal forest reserves; and

Whereas tularemia is becoming more prevalent among the wild animals and the State has no way of combating this disease and needs Federal assistance in this, as well as in the work of destroying predatory animals: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana hereby recommends the prompt passage of House Resolution 9599 by LEAVITT in order that the work of destroying predatory animals and suppressing rabies and tularemia among wild animals be effectively carried on; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to both Houses of the National Congress.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the enactment of Senate bill No. 5109, introduced by FRAZIER, providing for the liquidation and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness through Federal agencies.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Twenty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the house and senate concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas Senate bill No. 5109, introduced in the Congress of the United States by Senator FRAZIER, provides for the liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness and providing for a reduced rate of interest for the same through the Federal farm Loan System, Federal Reserve Bank System, and Postal Saving Depository System; and

Whereas the provisions of this will have a vital effect upon the agricultural industry of the State of Montana; and

Whereas at the present time many loans relating to the agricultural industry should bear a reduced rate of interest; and

Whereas there are funds in the various Federal financial departments to provide for this reduced rate of interest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, that the Congress of the United States should by proper legislation enact the provisions of the Frazier Act; and be it further

House Joint Memorial 9.—A resolution memorializing the Senate of the United States for the passage of Resolutions Nos. 442 and 443, introduced by Senator PITTMAN, relative to the stabilization of the silver market

To the honorable the Senate of the United States of America:

Whereas a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate has had under consideration trade relations with China and the causes and remedies for depressed conditions of commerce; and

Whereas a report thereon has been submitted by such subcommittee to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations; and

Whereas as a result of the investigations and findings of such subcommittee there has been introduced in the Senate of the United States Resolutions Nos. 442 and 443, by Senator PITTMAN, urging that the President, if he deem it to the best interests of the Government, enter into discussion and negotiations with the Governments of India, Great Britain, France, Belgium, and other governments looking to the suspension of the policy and practice of governments melting up or debasing silver coins and sales by governments of silver, and that he take such other and further action in the premises as he may deem necessary to eliminate the abnormal fluctuations and depressions in the price of silver; and that the President, if he deem it to the best interests of the Government, call or obtain an international conference or international conferences, to the end that agreements or understandings may be obtained with respect to the uses and status of silver as money; and further that the President of the United States, if he deem it to the best interests of the Government, enter into discussions or negotiations with the National Government of China and such other governments that have treaty relations with China, as China and the United States may consider it advisable, looking to the moral, intellectual, and financial aid of the National Government of China, and to that end to discuss and ascertain the advisability of establishing a silver pool or fund from which to supply the National Government of China with silver for coinage, to be used for certain specific purposes and in certain specified manner to be agreed upon, and to be repaid at a time and in a manner to be agreed upon; and further a consideration of the practicability of utilizing some of the standards dollars now in the Treasury of the United States in connection with such silver pool or the supplying of silver to China for coinage purposes; and further, that he consider the practicability of supplying such silver in kind, without reference to its ratio to gold or its market value, to be repaid in coin; and

Whereas the State of Montana is one of the large producers of silver in the United States, and its industrial life has been greatly hampered as the result of the serious fluctuations in the price of silver: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring), that the Senate of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, memorialized to pass said Resolutions Nos. 442 and 443, now pending in the Senate of the United States, to the end that the price of silver may be stabilized and our trade and commerce with China, India, and other silver-using countries may be increased; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senate of the United States of America, to the President of the United States of America, to the Vice President of the United States of America, to the Secretary of State of the United States of America, to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to each of the Senators from the State of Montana, and to Senator PITTMAN, of Nevada.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Assembly Joint Resolution 13

Assembly joint resolution, approved March 25, 1931, 6.42 p. m., memorializing the President and Congress of the United States that it is the sense of the members of the Nevada Legislature that the Government of the United States place American agriculture on the basis of equality with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit, and that adequate legislation to that end should be adopted at the earliest possible date

Whereas the farmers throughout the entire United States have lost and are losing their lands and chattels through inability to refinance loans on their property because of high interest rates and low prices of agricultural commodities; and

Whereas agriculture is one of the basic industries of this country, and there can be no sound business prosperity unless the business of agriculture is based on a sound basis and on an equal basis with other industries; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Senate of the United States, being S. 5109, a bill "To liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness; and to encourage and promote agriculture, commerce, and industry by establishing an efficient credit system through which the unjust and unequal burdens placed upon agriculture during the period of price fixing and deflation may be lightened by providing for the liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest through the Federal Farm Loan System, the Federal Reserve Banking System, and the Postal Savings Depository System, and creating a board of agriculture to supervise the same"; and

Whereas this bill is a sound economic measure designed to remedy the inequalities under which agriculture is now laboring: Now, therefore, be it

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

Joint Resolution 14, Laws of 1931.—A joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to construct a ship canal across the State of New Jersey from Raritan Bay to the Delaware River, at a point near the head of navigation

Whereas an inland waterways system has been provided along the entire Atlantic coast with the exception of the short distance through the State of New Jersey; and

Whereas the construction of a ship canal through the State of New Jersey will complete said inland waterways system; and

Whereas the State of New Jersey has heretofore appropriated considerable money for the acquisition of the right of way for such canal, and has from year to year reappropriated said moneys; and

Whereas the State of New Jersey has been and still is ready and willing to furnish the right of way for such canal in accordance with representations heretofore made to the Federal Government: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey,

1. That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized and requested to appropriate a sufficient sum of money to construct a ship canal across the State of New Jersey from Raritan Bay to the Delaware River, at a point near the head of navigation, upon a right of way to be furnished by this State; be it further

2. Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States from the State of New Jersey.

3. This joint resolution shall take effect immediately.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Joseph F. S. Fitzpatrick, secretary of state of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a joint resolution passed by the legislature of this State and approved by the governor the 27th day of April, A. D. 1931, as taken from and compared with the original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal at Trenton this 14th day of May, 1931.

[SEAL.] JOSEPH F. S. FITZPATRICK,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

House Joint Memorial 1 (introduced by William A. Spence and A. A. Rivera) memorializing the Congress of the United States to repeal the provisions relating to taxes lawfully assessed and levied in paragraphs a and b of section 4 of chapter 331 of the laws of the United States, entitled "An act to quiet the title to lands within Pueblo Indian land grants, and for other purposes," and cited in volume 43, Statutes at Large, part 1, 1923–1925, page 636

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has by the enactment of chapter 331, volume 43, Statutes at Large, passed an act to quiet the title to lands within Pueblo land grants; and

Whereas it is provided in section 4 of said act that all persons claiming title to or ownership of any lands involved in any suit to quiet title, such persons may, in addition to any other legal or equitable defenses, plead limitation of action, as follows:

"(a) That in themselves, their ancestors, grantors, privies, or predecessors, in interest or claim of interest, they have had open, notorious, actual, exclusive, continuous, adverse possession of the premises claimed, under color of title from the 6th day of January, 1902, to the date of the passage of this act, and have paid the taxes lawfully assessed and levied thereon to the extent required by the statutes of limitation, or adverse possession of the Territory or of the State of New Mexico, since the 6th day of January, 1902, to the date of the passage of this act, except where the claimant was exempted or entitled to be exempted from such tax payment.

"(b) That in themselves, their ancestors, grantors, privies, or predecessors in interest or claim of interest, they have had open, notorious, actual, exclusive, continuous, adverse possession of the premises claimed with claim of ownership but without color of title from the 16th day of March, 1889, to the date of the passage of this act, and have paid the taxes lawfully assessed and levied thereon to the extent required by the statutes of limitation or adverse possession of the Territory or of the State of New Mexico, from the 16th day of March, 1899, to the date of the passage of this act, except where the claimant was exempted or entitled to be exempted from such tax payment"; and

Whereas it is believed to be an injustice to require settlers within the limitations of such Indian pueblos to show that taxes have been lawfully assessed and levied since the 6th day of January, 1902, and since the 16th day of March, 1899; and

Whereas such settlers have, by reason of long, open, notorious, actual, exclusive, and continuous users of such lands, become established citizens and residents of this State; and

Whereas and due to erroneous description of the lands held by such settlers, it is impossible to show that they paid taxes lawfully assessed and levied, and without such showing will suffer great irreparable loss: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of New Mexico does hereby request the Congress of the United States to repeal those provisions relating to taxes lawfully assessed and levied, as set forth in said paragraphs a and b of section 4 of said chapter 331, volume 43, Statutes at Large, part 1; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the Hon. SAM G. BRATTON, the Hon. BRONSON CUTTING, Senators from New Mexico, and to the Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ, Member of Congress, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and President of the Senate of the United States Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate two communications from the Governor of the State of New York, which, with the accompanying acts of the New York Legislature in the nature of memorials, were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The people of the State of New York, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The Legislature of the State of New York applies to the Congress of the United States of America to call a national constitutional convention to repeal Article XVIII of the Constitution of the United States of America, and no other article of the Constitution.

SEC. 2. On the passage of this act the Governor of the State of New York shall forthwith cause to be filed with the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and the Secretary of State of the United States, engrossed copies of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately.

Assembly 1432.—An act on the application of the Legislature of the State of New York petitioning the Congress of the United States of America to submit a referendum to the citizens of the various States

The people of the State of New York, represented in the senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The Legislature of the State of New York petitions the Congress of the United States of America to enact by proper and appropriate legislation measures requesting the legislatures of the various States to submit to the voters of their respective States at the next general election in the form of referenda, the following questions: 1. Do you favor a repeal of the eighteenth (prohibition) amendment?

2. Do you favor a modification of the Volstead law to permit light wines and beers?

3. Do you favor a modification of the Volstead law so as to permit each State to define for itself what constitutes an intoxicating beverage?

4. Do you favor the continuance and strict enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and Volstead law?

SEC. 2. On the passage of this act the Governor of the State of New York shall forthwith cause to be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each Senator and Member of Congress elected from the State of New York, engrossed copies of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,

House Concurrent Resolution No. D–4.—Relating to the coloring of oleomargarine by the use of palm oil

Whereas under a ruling of the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue palm oil may now be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine to give it the color of butter without making such product subject to the tax on colored oleomargarine; and

Whereas this practically nullifies the protection which the dairymen of this country have enjoyed since 1902 in the law taxing colored oleomargarine 10 cents per pound; and

Whereas the effect of this ruling has been to greatly increase the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and similar butter substitutes despite the present very low price of butter; and

Whereas the coloring of oleomargarine to resemble butter constitutes a fraud upon the consuming public of the country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Twenty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota hereby protests against the ruling permitting oleomargarine and similar butter substitutes to be colored like butter through the use of palm oil without making these products subject to the 10-cent tax on colored oleomargarine, and respectfully requests the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reverse his ruling in the interests of the great dairy industry of this country and fair dealing with consumers; be it further

Resolved, That in the event that the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall not promptly reverse his ruling allowing palm oil to be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine and similar butter substitutes without making the product subject to the tax on colored oleomargarine, the Congress of the United States is respectfully requested to enact legislation either prohibiting the use of palm oil in the manufacture of oleomargarine or making any product manufactured with palm oil subject to the tax on colored oleomargarine; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury, the presiding officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each North Dakota Member thereof.

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,

House Concurrent Resolution L–12 (Concurrent Resolution L–12—Smith and Swett).—Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway

Whereas economic authorities in the United States and Canada, acting officially both as joint commissions and severally, have repeatedly and unanimously declared that enlarging the connecting channels of the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River to admit uninterrupted movement by ocean steamers from and into the Great Lakes is economically sound and necessary to raise the competitive position, establish equality, permit future development, and effect the return of prosperity to the vast continental areas of both countries; and

Whereas during the past five years diplomatic correspondence has brought the two nations into agreement on the assignment of tasks and division of costs, said correspondence having allocated to the United States the construction and cost of all improvements in international waters, which includes the deepening to 27 feet of the connecting channels of the upper Great Lakes, a new lock at the Soo corresponding in dimensions to the locks in the new Welland ship canal and the improvement of the international stretch of the St. Lawrence River from Lake Ontario to the forty-fifth parallel (opposite Cornwall), where the river ceases to form the boundary line between the two countries, and allocating to Canada the completion of the new Welland ship canal and the improvement of the river from the forty-fifth parallel aforesaid to the sea; and

Whereas approximately one-half of the tasks assigned to each Government has either been completed, is in process of completion, or already authorized by one or other of the two Governments, and approximately one-half of the total cost of the through seaway has either been expended, in process of being expended, or involved in authorizations already made, all of which has been carried out and is capable of being completed without any treaty; and

Whereas engineering authorities in Canada and the United States, acting officially both as joint boards and severally, have agreed upon engineering plans and costs and unanimously declared that the International Rapids (48 miles) of the St. Lawrence River, extending from Ogdensburg to the international boundary, must, for economic reasons, be developed for navigation and power jointly by the United States and Canada; and

Whereas the State of New York, with the clear intent of delaying or obviating the completion of a through seaway, via the St. Lawrence, and advancing a deep-water route across the State of New York by way of the Erie and Oswego Barge Canals, has caused to be prepared engineering plans, which if permitted to be carried out will, under the most favorable conditions, postpone navigation development for many years, and in the meantime afford New York opportunity to transfer its barge canals to the Federal Government and embark the Government upon the staggering expense of deepening or widening them for the passage of Lake ships down to the Port of New York for transfer to the ocean carrier, but not admitting the ocean ship to the Great Lakes, thus denying to midcontinental areas direct access to the sea; and

Whereas no development of this international-rapids section of the St. Lawrence River can be undertaken by either country or any agency in either country without an agreement or treaty appropriate thereto having first been entered into between Canada and the United States; and

Whereas the landlocked interior of the United States is deeply concerned and in emergent need of the relief which would accrue to that area by the opening of such seaway and the citizens of New York State also are directly interested in the improvement and early utilization of the large reservoir of cheap power which would be made available by such joint development; and

Whereas the need exists for a plan that will effect the development of this section of the river for navigation and power at the earliest possible date, by employing the most practical, the most expeditious, and best agency or agencies for that purpose: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the President of the United States be and is hereby memorialized to proceed to a treaty with Canada for the development of the aforesaid international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River at the earliest possible date and in accordance with the plans agreed upon by the International Joint Board of Engineers, or such amendment to or changes in said plans as may be subsequently adopted by such joint board; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be and is hereby memorialized to enact the necessary preliminary legislation declaring all lands and the entire flow of the St. Lawrence River, extending from the shore to the international boundary line in the river, from Lake Ontario to the forty-fifth parallel, where the river ceases to form the boundary between the nations, necessary for the purposes of navigation of said waters and the waters connected therewith; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the House of Representatives of the State of Pennsylvania, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration:

The General Assembly of Pennsylvania, file of the House of Representatives, Resolution No. 52, Mr. McAlee in place, May 21, 1931

Whereas the Federal officials at Washington have admitted there are over 6,000,000 people out of employment in America to-day; and

Whereas there are beyond any reason of doubt several million more people who are only able to secure employment on part time in America to-day; and

Whereas the Federal officials at Washington claim that there are at least 100,000 alien seamen alone that are illegally living in America; and

Whereas the Federal officials at Washington claim there are besides the 100,000 alien seamen at least three to four hundred thousand more aliens who illegally entered the United States; and

Whereas the nearly one-half million aliens claimed by Federal officials to have entered the United States illegally are either directly or indirectly adding to the burdens of both municipalities, and citizen's committees on unemployment throughout the State and Nation that are now endeavoring to appropriate or raise money to relieve the increasing distress of unemployment; and

Whereas there is no question in the minds of thinking American citizens that there are some aliens who have entered the United States illegally and are adding to the burden of the cost of crime throughout the entire country; and

Whereas nearly every European country long ago, in the defense of the unemployed of their country and to put a stop to alien criminals entering and adding to their burden and cost of crime, passed laws calling for the registration of both native and foreign born citizens; and

Whereas the United States, with its many miles of coast and border lines, without a large army of immigration and custom employees at a prohibitive cost to the taxpayers, are not able to stop or arrest both good and bad aliens from entering America illegally; and

Whereas the present and future distress of unemployment can be given relief by the Government deporting all aliens that have or will enter the United States illegally: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the consensus of opinion of the members of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania that both Houses of Congress at Washington should when they meet in December, 1931, enact legislation that will provide for the registration of both Americans and aliens in the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor at Washington be requested to prepare all data and information as to the cost that may be necessary for the information of Congress to enact the proposed national registration law when they meet in December, 1931; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house of representatives be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress at Washington, D. C., with the request that they have the resolution read and then refer the resolution to the proper committee for their consideration, also a copy to each Member of the Congress of the United States from this Commonwealth with the request that they work and vote to enact this proposed national registration law, also mail copies to the Secretary of Labor, Secretary of State, and the President for their information.

The foregoing is a true and correct copy of the resolution adopted by the house of representatives March 27, 1931.

Chief Clerk, House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

A concurrent resolution

Whereas there is existing at the present time a period of depression covering the entire world, and that the United States has granted a moratorium to foreign countries, and that the farm lands of the South are heavily encumbered by mortgages, a majority of which are held by Federal land banks and other governmental agencies; and

Whereas these banks have sold bonds secured by said real-estate mortgages and it is impossible to extend the payment of the said mortgages without provision for payment of interest to the holders of the said bonds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

1. That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to appropriate such amount as will be necessary to retire interest coupons falling due during the next 12 months on bonds issued by such land banks and other governmental agencies.

2. That the Treasury Department be authorized and directed to buy up the said interest coupons as they become due during the next 12 months.

3. That upon the provision being made as set out in sections 1 and 2, that the Federal land banks and other governmental agencies be directed and authorized to extend the time of payment of mortgages held by them for the period of one year.

4. That the Senators and Congressmen of South Carolina are requested to lend every effort toward the passage of such legislation as will give the relief set out in this resolution.

5. That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Congressmen of South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 15 (introduced by fish and game committee), relating to the protection of the woods, waters, and wild life of Rainy Lake watershed and adjacent areas of similar nature

Whereas the unique network of interconnecting lakes in the area of Superior National Forest in northern Minnesota stretches far across the unguarded border into the Province of Ontario; and

Whereas this forested lakeland, so readily accessible to the people of the great central sections of both the United States and Canada, is one of the most historic, healthful, and beautiful survivals of pioneer America; and

Whereas there has been formulated for the perpetuation of this wilderness region a plan that contemplates joint action with the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario for the establishment by treaty of a vast international forest and park, dedicated in the name of peace; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States by unanimous action on June 3, 1930, with the approval of the President on July 10, 1930, has already wisely recorded itself against the commercial exploitation of that portion of the border lakes and their tributaries lying in northern Minnesota from Rainy Lake eastward to Lake Superior; and

Whereas various attempts are being made by private interests to secure the approval of the International Joint Commission, of the Federal Power Commission, and of other agencies for storage and power projects affecting these waters; and

Whereas disturbance of the age-old scheme of nature by further industrial invasion can not help but seriously impair, if not completely destroy, the present public appeal and usefulness of the region; and

Whereas in a state of nature the potential value of the region for our peoples and our peoples' children far outweighs any temporary private advantage from logging, power, or other commercial development; Be it therefore

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the International Joint Commission be, and are hereby, requested and urged to refuse all requests for the construction of dams and the flooding of any part of this rare recreational region and to recognize instead the policy of perpetuating the wilderness character of this lakeland for the health, delight, and inspiration of present and future generations; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Premier of the Dominion of Canada, to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress at Washington, to the presiding officers of both houses of the Ontario Parliament at Toronto, to the International Joint Commission at Washington and Ottawa, to the Federal Power Commission, to the Governor of the State of Minnesota, to the premier of the Province of Ontario, and to all Representatives of the State of South Dakota at Washington.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 17 (introduced by Mr. Warren) memorializing the Congress of the United States and the Legislature of the State of Nebraska to cooperate with the State of South Dakota in the purchase of the Meridian Highway Bridge across the Missouri River at Yankton, S. Dak., so as to convert the same into a free bridge

Whereas the twenty-second legislative session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota has passed an act authorizing the State of South Dakota to cooperate with the United States of America and the State of Nebraska in the purchase of the Meridian Highway Bridge connecting the States of Nebraska and South Dakota across the Missouri River, at Yankton, S. Dak., upon the following terms:

Twenty-five per cent of the appraised valuation to be paid by the State of South Dakota; 25 per cent of the appraised valuation to be paid by the State of Nebraska; 50 per cent of the appraised valuation to be paid by the United States of America; and the bridge thereupon to become the sole property of the United States of America and to be operated and maintained by it as a free bridge; and

Whereas the conversion of said bridge from a toll bridge to a free bridge will greatly facilitate commerce and tourist travel between the States of the Union and will directly an indirectly be a source of permanent benefit to all the people of the United States, and will result in placing this important link of the highway system of the United States within the sole control of public agencies and free from control of private agencies: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That we respectfully memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States of America and the Legislature of the State of Nebraska to join in the enterprise as above outlined in the title and preamble of this resolution.

That we respectfully request the Senators and Representatives of the State of South Dakota in the Congress of the United States to give earnest support to the accomplishment of this enterprise.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the State of South Dakota, through its State highway commission, is hereby authorized to cooperate with the United States Government in its program of acquiring, by purchase, toll bridges whenever it is considered that the free operation of such bridge would be advantageous in the interest of interstate commerce, the improvement of the postal service, or in connection with the national defense. For the accomplishment of such purpose the State highway commission is hereby empowered to cooperate with the State of Nebraska and the United States Government in acquiring by purchase, by the United States Government, the Meridian Highway Bridge at Yankton, S. Dak. That the State highway commission is authorized to contribute funds to the extent of not to exceed 25 per cent of the purchase price thereof, which purchase price shall be fixed by appraisal as herein provided. That the funds herein provided shall become available as soon as the State of Nebraska shall have provided for and make available an amount equal to 25 per cent of said purchase price and the United States Government shall have provided and made available equal amount to 50 per cent of the said purchase price.

SEC. 2. That the funds herein provided for shall become available, in addition to the contingency provided for in section 1 hereof, when the said Meridian Highway Bridge at Yankton, S. Dak., shall have been appraised by a joint appraisal board consisting of the State highway commission of this State, the department designated by the United States Government, the highway authorities of the State of Nebraska, and the board of directors of the Meridian Highway Bridge Co.: Provided, however, That no contract or agreement shall be entered into by the State of South Dakota and no obligations shall be incurred herein unless such appraisal shall be found satisfactory by the State Highway Commission of the State of South Dakota and approved by the governor of this State.

SEC. 3. That in the event of the purchase of the said Meridian Highway Bridge at Yankton, S. Dak., the title to the same shall by proper instrument or instruments of conveyance be made to the United States. That before any expenditure of the funds herein provided for shall be made, it shall be the duty of the attorney general of this State to make a thorough investigation of the title to the property of the Meridian Highway Bridge Co. and of all proceedings in connection with such sale.

SEC. 4. That the necessary funds for the carrying out of the provisions of this bill shall be paid out of the State bridge fund created by chapter 128 of the Session Laws of 1921, and so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated out of such bridge fund not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 5. It is the intent and purpose of this act to cooperate with the Government of the United States in acquiring any toll bridge for the purpose of establishing such toll bridges as toll-free bridges.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House concurrent resolution, introduced by committee on State affairs—A concurrent resolution relating to the development of the St. Lawrence River

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota:

Whereas the authorities of the United States and Canada have agreed that enlargement of the connecting channels of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River so that ocean-going vessels may come to the Lake ports will improve the competitive position, establish economical equality, and assist in future development of the farm lands in the center of the continent; and

Whereas diplomatic correspondence has effected an agreement between the two countries on the assignment of tasks and divisions of costs, and the engineering authorities in Canada and the United States, acting under orders from their Governments, have agreed upon plans and costs and unanimously declared that the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River, extending 48 miles from Ogdensburg to the international boundary, must, for economic reasons, be developed for navigation and power jointly; and

Whereas no development of this international-rapids section of the river can be undertaken by either country or any agency in either country without an agreement or treaty first having been entered into between Canada and the United States; and

Whereas the landlocked interior of the United States is deeply concerned and in vital need of the relief which would accrue to this area by the opening of such waterway; and

Whereas the need exists for an official plan that will effect the development of this section of the river for navigation and power at the earliest possible date: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring), That the President of the United States be and is hereby memorialized to effect such a treaty with Canada for the development of the international-rapids section of the St. Lawrence River at the earliest possible date; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be and is hereby memorialized to enact the necessary preliminary legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit copies of this resolution to His Excellency President Herbert Hoover and to the presiding officers of the United States Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

STATE OF UTAH,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, M. H. Welling, secretary of state of the State of Utah, do hereby certify that the following is a full, true, and correct copy of House Joint Memorial No. 1, by Mr. Hirschi and Mr. Esplin, being a memorial to the Congress of the United States protesting against the withdrawal from entry and against preventing grazing on public lands in northwestern Arizona, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Utah and approved by his honor Gov. George H. Dern, March 7, 1931, as appears on file in my office.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Utah, at Salt Lake City, this 10th day of March, 1931.

[SEAL.]

M. H. WELLING,
Secretary of State.

House Joint Memorial 1 (by Mr. Hirschi and Mr. Esplin), to the Congress of the United States protesting against the withdrawal from entry and against preventing grazing on public lands in northwestern Arizona

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah (the governor concurring therein):

Whereas the area in the State of Arizona which lies northward of the Gorge of the Colorado River, commonly known as "The Arizona Strip," is an arid country, except for the Kaibab Plateau and the Trumbull Mountain Range, and except for small plots which are cultivated immediately surrounding the settlements of Fredonia, Moccasin, and Littlefield, has no agricultural development and has always been a grazing country since the settlement of that locality and has been utilized as range land for the grazing of cattle and sheep owned chiefly by the people who reside in the settlements of southern Utah; and

Whereas this area is capable of sustaining upward of 25,000 head of cattle throughout the year and more than 200,000 head of sheep during the winter grazing season; and

Whereas the policy of the Federal Government in withdrawing large portions of the said "Arizona Strip" from grazing, thus resulting in great detriment and loss to the people who depend upon the livestock industry for their livelihood; the principal instances being:

(1) A large area in the vicinity of Moccasin was withdrawn and set aside as an Indian reservation, which entire reservation was fenced and grazing was excluded therefrom, except upon the payment of prohibitive fees;

(2) Sheep have been entirely excluded from the Kaibab National Forest and the Grand Canyon National Park, except two small bands, and permits for the grazing of cattle on the Kaibab Forest have been restricted so that there are now not more than 1,000 head of cattle permitted on the whole reserve for the summer season, where in former days this area sustained upward of 15,000 head of cattle and 10,000 head of sheep during the summer grazing season;

(3) On April 25, 1930, by Executive order of the President, approximately 2,000,000 acres of land, for the purpose of "determination as to the advisability of including such lands in a national monument" in the vicinity of the proposed Hoover Dam, were withdrawn. This withdrawal embraces a tract 25 miles back from the Colorado River from 20 miles below the proposed Hoover Dam site upstream 300 miles to Kanab Creek. If this withdrawal is made permanent and if the present restrictive policy against grazing is applied by the National Government in this area, it will exclude about 75,000 head of sheep from their present regular winter grazing grounds and about 15,000 head of cattle from their full-year grazing grounds and will greatly retard the development of this section of Arizona and the southern part of the State of Utah and prevent homesteaders and livestock growers from acquiring ownership of the land; and

(4) In addition to the foregoing it is now being proposed by the Arizona Game Department that the Congress withdraw from homestead entry and fence as a buffalo pasture a large portion of what is known as House Rock Valley, which lies between the Colorado River Gorge and the Kaibab Plateau, to the east of the Kaibab. This valley has supported, and is capable of supporting, as winter grazing ground fully 5,000 head of cattle. It is proposed to withdraw and reserve the choicest part of this area, embracing approximately 40,000 acres, for the use of a bunch of buffalo, now numbering about 97 head; the said area to be fenced in such a manner as to control all of House Rock Valley, an area in excess of 185,000 acres; and

Whereas each of these withdrawals and proposed withdrawals results and will result in the curtailment of the area open for grazing without materially benefiting anyone, and if continued will take away the means of livelihod of many persons in this State and result in financial ruin to those who depend upon the livestock industry for a livelihood: Be it, therefore,

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah, in regular session assembled:

I. That the Congress of the United States be respectfully urged to enact such legislation as may be necessary to open the Moccasin Indian Reservation to free grazing.

II. That the Congress of the United States be urgently requested to revoke and annul the Executive order of April 25, 1930, withdrawing approximately 2,000,000 acres of land in the vicinity of the proposed Hoover Dam.

III. That a more liberal policy with respect to grazing of livestock within the Kaibab National Forest be effected.

IV. That the Congress of the United States do not pass any act withdrawing or permitting the withdrawal of any area whatsoever in House Rock Valley as a buffalo pasture. Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Utah is authorized and directed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and that copies thereof be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State and the State of Arizona.

The foregoing House Joint Memorial No. 1 was publicly read by title and immediately thereafter signed by the president of the senate, in the presence of the house of which he presides, and the fact of such signing duly entered upon the journal this 6th day of March, 1931.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to at once make adequate appropriations to give employment to the millions of unemployed workmen of the country

Whereas by the lowest estimate at least 4,000,000 workmen are at present unemployed in this country and the true number of the unemployed is probably twice as great; and

Whereas the only measure of relief that has been enacted is the emergency construction bill which will make available about $116,000,000 for additional public construction, of which probably not more than 60 per cent will go in wages to workmen, allowing only on the average about $14 per unemployed workman; and

Whereas there are many public construction projects that ought to be carried out at this time, including improvement of 500,000 miles of primary through highways in this country; and

Whereas the only objection offered to the adoption of an adequate program of public construction, which would at once end the present depression, is that it would cost perhaps one to five billion dollars; and

Whereas a Liberty loan for the jobless of this amount would be but a small fraction of the more than $20,000,000,000 of Liberty loan contracted by this country for the prosecution of a foreign war and the feeding of starving people in European nations: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to at once enact legislation making appropriations for a really adequate program of public construction which would afford employment to all unemployed workmen and end the existing depression; be it therefore

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact effective legislation to check the development of chain banking among national banks

Whereas there has been a startling development of chain banking in all parts of the country during the last two years, probably more than one-third of the total banking resources of the United States having already passed into the control of holding companies; and

Whereas chain banking, at its best, means control of the local banks by corporations having no interest in the communities they serve other than to derive the maximum amount of profits therefrom, and is destructive of individual initiative, on which the economic greatness of this country is founded; and

Whereas chain banking, at least in the Middle West, has developed principally around national banks, which are within the exclusive control of the Federal Government, so that the States can not deal with this problem alone: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to promptly enact amendments to the national banking laws to make it impossible for national banks to be owned or controlled by holding companies; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the presiding officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to a 5-day week in the Federal service

Whereas it has long been regarded as a sound principle that the Government should be a model employer and should lead, rather than lag behind, in all movements for the improvement of working conditions; and

Whereas the 5-day working week has already been adopted by a considerable number of employers in private industry, but the United States Government, which is the largest employer of labor in the entire country, has not yet adopted this forward step, but, on the contrary, has many employees who are required to work seven days each week: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to promptly enact legislation providing for a 5-day working week throughout the Federal service; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

President of the Senate.

Chief Clerk of the Senate.
CHAS B. PERRY

C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly,

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation for unemployment insurance

Whereas statistics show that this country is almost constantly faced with the unemployment situation, either sectional or national in its scope; and

Whereas unemployment subjects its victims to the ravages of extreme poverty and causes an enormous increase in crime; and

Whereas the only way to combat this unemployment menace is to insure for the workingman a steady and living wage: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation making it possible for the workingman to be protected by unemployment insurance: Be it therefore

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN.
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to take immediate steps for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway

Whereas the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, through which the largest ocean-going vessels will be enabled to reach lake ports, would result in a large reduction in freight rates upon agricultural and manufactured products, with consequent increased returns to the farmers and a great stimulation of industry throughout the entire Middle West; and

Whereas this project has now been brought materially nearer realization by the completion of the new Welland Canal at the expense of Canada, by the settlement of the long controversy over the Chicago Drainage Canal, and by the steps which Canada is now taking for the deepening of the canals to accommodate ocean-going vessels around the rapids of the St. Lawrence River in the Canadian section thereof; and

Whereas all that remains to be done is the construction of less than 20 miles of canals around the rapids in the international section of the St. Lawrence River, a project which all of the several international commissions and other bodies which have investigated the same have found can be carried out at far less expense than the cost of the Panama Canal; and

Whereas the early beginning of this work would very materially aid in the early restoration of economic prosperity and would afford employment to many workmen now unemployed; and

Whereas the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway has the support of the great majority of the people both of the United States and of Canada, and there is every reason to believe that the Canadian Government as now constituted will welcome negotiations for the early beginning of this work: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby again indorses the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project and respectfully memorializes the President of the United States to at once negotiate arrangements with Canada for the conclusion of a treaty under which this project may become a reality, and also memorializes the Congress of the United States in the event that a treaty is negotiated to promptly ratify the same and to enact the necessary legislation for the beginning of work on this project; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to each House of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
CHAS. B. PERRY,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation for the expenditure of moneys appropriated by the Federal Government for Indian relief through State agencies

Whereas many of the Indians in this State are in dire distress at this time, being at the starvation point and dying in large numbers from preventable diseases; and

Whereas the Federal Government makes large appropriations for the relief of the Indians, their education, health work, the promotion of agriculture among them, and like purposes, but little of this money appears ever to reach the Indians; and

Whereas bills are now pending in Congress providing that the moneys appropriated by the Federal Government for the benefit of the Indians in the several States should be expended through the State agencies, which bills have the indorsement of Secretary of the Interior Wilbur; and

Whereas the Indians are the original Americans and their distress is a reproach to the white man's civilization and should not be allowed to continue: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass legislation before the close of the present Congress to give the States control over the care of the Indians within their borders and making available to them all Federal moneys appropriated for Indian welfare: Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of the Interior, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a Federal old age pension law

Whereas approximately 6,000,000 persons in the United States are above 65 years of age and at least 2,000,000 of this number are supported by public or private charity or by relatives; and

Whereas the great majority of these aged persons are people of sterling character and worth who have been reduced to dependency by misfortunes and the meagerness of the wages they received during the productive period of their life; and

Whereas no less than 38 foreign countries, including all large civilized countries except the United States, have enacted nationwide old age pension laws, under which all aged persons are given pensions sufficient to support them without in any manner pauperizing them; and

Whereas in the absence of Federal legislation in this country a considerable number of States and counties have enacted old age pension laws to accord more humane treatment to aged dependents but such laws are not only financially burdensome to the States and counties but do not meet the entire problem, which is nationwide and should be dealt with through Federal legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact a Federal old age pension law along the lines of the old age pension laws which have been passed by Wisconsin and other States: Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to the proposed national park on the Apostle Islands

Whereas the United States Government has under consideration the conversion of the Apostle Islands in Chequamegon Bay into a national park; and

Whereas the rock formations and other natural features of these islands are among the most striking to be found anywhere in the North Central States, and the historical associations date back to a Jesuit mission established on Madeline Island more than 200 years ago; and

Whereas the Apostle Islands can still be acquired at a very small outlay, and the highway program which the present legislature has adopted will, within a few years, make them accessible through an improved highway to the millions of people residing in the population centers of the Middle West: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Secretary of Agriculture, the United States Forest Service, and the Congress of the United States to take necessary steps for the establishment of a national park embracing all of the Apostle Islands, or so many of them as it may be deemed advisable to acquire; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Director of the Forest Service, the presiding officers of each of the Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for the conscription of wealth in time of war

Whereas in time of war the Nation must demand from many of its citizens their most valuable possession, life itself; and

Whereas when the Nation requires such sacrifices from some of its citizens it is but fair that others who are not required to risk their health and lives should contribute any wealth, which they may have beyond their needs, to the common cause; and

Whereas great wealth is to-day international, so that the international banker and financier profit from war, no matter which side wins: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to the effect that no person, association, or corporation be allowed to retain any excess profits made from or by reason of any war: Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass appropriate legislation for the restoration of Fort Howard

Whereas the old Fort Howard, located at Green Bay, is one of the outstanding historic spots in Wisconsin, marking the probable site where Jean Nicolet landed in 1634 as the first white man ever to come to Wisconsin, after which it was for more than a century the site of a French fort and fur-trading station, later becoming a British fort, and in 1816 a regular United States Army post, with its present name, and for more than a quarter of a century was one of the three United States forts which protected the water-route connection between the Great Lakes and the Mississippi River and the principal military road in this State; and

Whereas a movement to restore Fort Howard was inaugurated a little more than a year ago by the city council of Green Bay and a bill was introduced in the last Congress by Senator BLAINE for a Federal appropriation for this purpose, which will, no doubt, be again offered in the first session of the present Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact appropriate legislation for the restoration of Fort Howard and its preservation as a memorial of the stirring days of the early history of this State: Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to prohibit the use of oleomargarine in Federal institutions and in the Army and Navy of the United States

Whereas oleomargarine is a product manufactured mainly from vegetable oils not produced in the United States, in competition with butter, which is one of the principal sources of income of the American farmers; and

Whereas oleomargarine is an imitation product, inferior in many respects to butter, with which it unfairly competes; and

Whereas the existing Federal laws permit oleomargarine to be used in the institutions conducted by the National Government and in the Army and Navy of the United States, and not less than 1,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were fed to inmates and employees in the Federal institutions in 1929 alone; and

Whereas this State absolutely prohibits the use of oleomargarine in any institution supported in whole or in part from public funds: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States, before the adjournment of the present session, to enact a law prohibiting the use of oleomargarine or any other kind of butter substitute in the Army, Navy, hospitals, and other Government institutions; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation for the public operation and development of Muscle Shoals

Whereas during the war period the United States Government invested more than $150,000,000 in dams and other property in the stretch of the Tennessee River in Alabama known as Muscle Shoals, and this is one of the world's greatest power developments; and

Whereas this great investment of the people of the United States is being dissipated through the failure of Congress to make provisions for the development and operation of this project and there is grave danger that the entire property will be given away to power interests on the plea that the Government should not engage in business; and

Whereas President Hoover during the presidential campaign of 1928 in an interview stated that the principle that the Government should not engage in business should not be applied to Muscle Shoals inasmuch as this project has already been developed at public expense, and the benefits thereof should go to the entire people of the country and not to any limited number of private individuals or corporations; and

Whereas the Seventieth Congress enacted legislation for the public development and operation of Muscle Shoals, only to have this bill killed by a pocket veto, and the United States Senate in the Seventy-first Congress has passed a similar measure: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin again expresses its indorsement of the plan for the public operation and development of Muscle Shoals, generally known as the Norris bill, and urges the Congress of the United States to promptly pass this measure and the President to give his approval thereto; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Joint resolution relating to Federal aid for forestry

Whereas of the original 820,000,000 acres of forest lands in the United States only 100,000,000 acres of virgin timber remain, and the annual timber cut is five times as great as the timber growth; and

Whereas there are above 200,000,000 acres of cut-over lands in this country which are at present practically valueless for any purpose other than for growing timber; and

Whereas promising beginnings in reforestation have been made, not only by the Federal Government but by many of the States and counties, the further development of which is dependent to a very great extent upon the provisions for financial assistance; and

Whereas the Federal Government, through its aids for public roads, upon which it has spent nearly a billion dollars, stimulated the good-roads movement and got all States interested in the improvement of their highways; and

Whereas similar results could be expected if the Federal Government in a substantial manner aided reforestation work by the States and counties: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation for aid to the extent of 10 cents per acre per year to States and the political subdivisions thereof maintaining county forests, such aid to be expended exclusively for carrying on forestry on publicly owned lands; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby commends the 33 Democratic Senators who voted to override the President's veto of the Muscle Shoals public power bill; be it further

Joint resolution relating to the opening date of the hunting season for migratory birds

Whereas the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, on March 17, 1931, promulgated a regulation, under the authority conferred upon him by the migratory bird treaty act, in which the opening date for hunting migratory birds within the State of Wisconsin is fixed as October 1, instead of September 16, as heretofore; and

Whereas many varieties of migratory game birds leave Wisconsin to fly south before October 1, so that the change in the Federal regulations will prevent any hunting of these birds in this State; and

Whereas this change in the opening date of the hunting season will not afford any additional protection to the migratory game birds, but will merely deprive citizens of the Nortern States from hunting, while citizens of States further south are free to shoot these birds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully requests the Secretary of Agriculture and the President to rescind the order of March 17, 1931, in so far as it changes the opening day for the hunting of migratory game birds in this State from September 16 to October 1, and also urges the Members of Congress of this State to make every effort to have this order rescinded, or to have the statute amended to give relief in this respect to the people of Wisconsin; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, the presiding officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to amend the Federal income tax law so as to give credit for income-tax payments made to the several States

Whereas income taxes are in accord with the principle of ability to pay and the fairest of all taxes; and

Whereas the income tax is an important source of revenue to 16 States, and a dozen or more other States are considering the enactment of State income tax laws; and

Whereas as long as all States do not have State income taxes there is opportunity for evasion through the nominal removal of a taxpayer from an income-tax State to a non-income-tax State, and threats are made of several more effective removals whenever any attempt is made to place a larger part of the total tax burden upon incomes; and

Whereas the similar situation which formerly existed with reference to the State inheritance tax laws was remedied by the simple device of giving credit for payments of inheritance taxes made to the several States in the determination of the Federal inheritance tax; and

Whereas a similar provision is entirely feasible with reference to State income taxes as well as inheritance taxes, and would be effective to prevent much evasion now occurring and make it possible to use the State income taxes to effect the much-needed, really substantial readjustment of the burden of State and local taxes: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to amend the Federal income tax law so as to give credit to income taxes paid to the State as an offset against Federal income taxes assessed against the same taxpayer, similar to the credit now allowed under the Federal inheritance tax law for inheritance taxes paid to the States; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be submitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to refrain from enacting a law placing a tariff or embargo on crude petroleum and the refined products thereof

Whereas petroleum producers have secured the legislatures in certain petroleum-producing States to pass resolutions memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a law placing a tariff or an embargo on petroleum and its refined products, claiming that such a measure is necessary as a relief measure to the industry in these States; and

Whereas such a tariff or embargo would place an additional burden of over $350,000,000 that would be borne by the owners of over 27,000,000 automobiles and trucks, and would be a benefit to comparatively few petroleum producers; and

Whereas only four or five States produce oil to any considerable extent and their citizens comprise only a small portion of the population of the United States; and

Whereas petroleum and its refined products are necessary to carry on trade and commerce; and

Whereas it has been the well-settled policy for the past decade, both by the petroleum producers and the Government, to conserve our petroleum deposits; and

Whereas an embargo or tariff would have the effect of hastening the depletion of petroleum in the United States and increase the price of gasoline to the consumer: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to refrain from the enacting of any laws imposing a tariff or an embargo on crude petroleum or the refined products thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to enact a law making income from royalties on patents and copyrights taxable under State income tax laws

Whereas in Long v. Rockwood (277 U. S. 142), decided two years ago, the United States Supreme Court in a five to four decision held unconstitutional, as violation of section 8 of Article I of the United States Constitution the attempt of the State of Massachusetts to tax income from royalties on patents and copyrights; and

Whereas in Educational Film Corporation of America v. Hamilton Ward, a case decided January 12, 1931, the United States Supreme Court held valid an excise tax imposed by the State of New York on the income from royalties received from patents and copyrights; and

Whereas many cases are now pending in the courts of this State involving the question whether the attempt of this State to tax the income from royalties on patents and copyrights violates the Federal Constitution; and

Whereas the decisions of the United States Supreme Court herein mentioned leave uncertain whether income from royalties can now be taxed under a State income tax law; and

Whereas Congress can remove this doubt by specifically providing that royalties on patents and copyrights may be taxed under the State income tax laws: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to specifically authorize the States to tax royalties on patents and copyrights to the same extent and in the same manner as they tax other income. Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof, and also to both houses of the legislatures of all States having State income tax laws whose legislatures are now in session.

Joint resolution relating to an increase in the tariff on butter, cheese, and eggs

Whereas the prices now being paid for dairy products and eggs are the lowest in over 20 years; and

Whereas these prices are absolutely ruinous to all dairy farmers and threaten universal bankruptcy; and

Whereas these low prices are at least partly due to the large importations of butter, cheese, and eggs from foreign countries, no less than 3,298,000 pounds of butter, 84,606,000 pounds of cheese, 291,000 dozen eggs, 10,000,000 pounds of dried eggs, and 27,968,000 pounds of frozen eggs, egg yolks, and egg albumen being imported in 1929; and

Whereas this destructive competition can be absolutely eliminated through more adequate tariff duties: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the President of the United States and the Tariff Commission and the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to promptly take measures for the increase of the tariff on butter, cheese, and eggs to eliminate all destructive competition, which is a large factor in the ruinous prices now being paid for these products. Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the United States Tariff Commission, to each House of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Whereas the United States Government pursuant to act of Congress is loaning to veterans of the World War 50 per cent of their bonus certificates and is charging 4½ per cent interest on said loans; and

Whereas these young men risked their lives in the service of their country and gave up their opportunities to earn a living and many of them are in extremely needy circumstances; and

Whereas the Government has reduced the debts of foreign nations; and

Whereas the Government pays no interest on such bonus certificates in cases where the veterans do not make loans upon them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact a law remitting the interest on such bonus loans; be it further

Whereas this proposal has created a wave of optimism throughout the world and will aid in stimulating trade and industry: Now, therefore, be it

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States repealing the eighteenth amendment

Whereas the American Constitution was designed as a fundamental instrument of government. It was not intended to be a declaration of police powers nor an invasion of the rights of sovereign States or their citizens.

The eighteenth amendment attempts to accomplish these things. It was ratified through hysteria under the stress of war conditions. It never had, and it never will have, that public sanction without which it can not be enforced.

Attempts to enforce it without such sanction have cost the expenditure of billions of dollars, with the loss of enormous revenue in taxation which might have been derived from better regulatory control.

The eighteenth amendment and its impossibility of enforcement have brought both the Federal Constitution and law into disrepute, and is a subject for jesting throughout the world.

In the overwhelming cost of attempted enforcement and in the enormous loss of revenue which should be derived from the proper regulation of the sale of intoxicating beverages, the eighteenth amendment is an unwise imposition on the American people—it ought to be eliminated from the Federal Constitution: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to adopt and submit to the various States for ratification a proper amendatory resolution for the purpose of eliminating the eighteenth amendment from the United States Constitution; be it further

Resolved, That a properly certified copy of this resolution be sent to each of the following officials: To the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Chief Clerks of said respective Houses, and to each Senator and Representative from the State of Wisconsin in the Congress of the United States.

Joint resolution relating to a constitutional convention to amend or repeal the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States

Whereas the eighteenth amendment to the United States Constitution providing for nation-wide prohibition represents a policy which has proven unworkable and is contrary to the wishes of the great majority of the people of this State; and

Whereas Article V of the United States Constitution provides for the calling of a constitutional convention to propose amendments to the Constitution when the requisite number of States request such a convention: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States, pursuant to Article V of the Constitution, to call a convention for the purpose of either amending or repealing the eighteenth amendment. Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for a nation-wide referendum on prohibition

Whereas the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act were adopted without affording the voters of this country an opportunity to express their wishes upon prohibition; and

Whereas, while the voters of many States, including Wisconsin, have in an unmistakable manner expressed their disapproval of prohibition, there has never been afforded an opportunity to the qualified voters of the entire country to express themselves upon this subject; and

Whereas a nation-wide popular referendum would give an accurate expression of the wishes of the people on this question and is the democratic way of settling the same: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concuring), That the members of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin hereby record themselves as respectfully memorializing Congress to enact the necessary legislation for the holding of a nation-wide referendum on the two following questions:

1. Shall the policy of prohibition be abandoned?
2. Shall the Volstead Act be amended to allow the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer? Be it further

Whereas the prohibition question has become of acute national importance; and

Whereas the time has arrived when proper action should be taken to alleviate the deplorable conditions relating to prohibition; and

Whereas the Province of British Columbia, Canada, does effectively and satisfactorily regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors: Now, therefore, be it

Joint resolution relating to the so-called Wickersham report on prohibition

Whereas the United States Commission on the Enforcement of the Criminal Laws, popularly known as the Wickersham Commission, in a divided report has recommended further trial and strict enforcement of the policy of national prohibition; and

Whereas despite the fact that this commission was appointed by a President who in the 1928 presidential campaign termed prohibition "a noble experiment" and the majority of its members were known to be supporters of prohibition, 2 of the 11 members declared themselves in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and 4 others expressed their conviction that this amendment should be modified; and

Whereas the recommendation made by the commission that prohibition be given a further trial and that increased appropriations be made for its enforcement is inconsistent with the views expressed by these six members of the commission; and

Whereas experience has demonstrated that prohibition is unenforceable, results in making criminals of law-abiding citizens, and immensely increases the difficulties of preventing serious crimes: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby urges upon the Congress of the United States the immediate repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the abandonment of the policy of prohibition in lieu of voting increased appropriations for its enforcement; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the members of the United

Joint resolution relating to the manufacture and sale of beer and wines

Whereas this country is now faced with a most serious depression and there are few, if any, measures which will accomplish so much to stimulate business and employment as would a modification of the Volstead Act to allow the manufacture and sale of beer and wine; and

Whereas legalization of the manufacture of beer alone would afford employment to nearly 2,000,000 men; would mean increased sales and earnings to the farmers, grain dealers, automobile and truck companies, and box and bottle factories; would stimulate railroad transportation, real estate, and other kindred businesses; and would prove beneficial to all industries through increasing the buying power of the consuming public by 2,000,000 well-employed men; and

Whereas such a modification of the Volstead Act would help to rid the country of racketeering, highjacking, and other evils which have followed the trail of prohibition: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to relieve the present depression and to bring work and business to millions by modifying the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer and wine; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress to pass a Federal antilynching act

Whereas lynching not only constitutes a grave crime but tends to undermine respect for law and order and government itself; and

Whereas, despite increased public sentiment against lynching, a considerable number of such outrages occur each year; and

Whereas there is little hope for the complete abolition of lynching until the Federal Government will make this its responsibility: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact appropriate legislation for the apprehension and punishment of all persons guilty of lynching in any part of the United States; be it further

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to grant Federal aid to abolish lynching

Whereas the people of the State of Wisconsin have been deeply shocked by, and justifiably incensed over, the lynching outrages which have at various times been perpetrated in some of the States; and

Whereas it is the sense of the people and of the legislature of this State that such outrages have a marked and definite tendency to destroy respect of our people for law and order; and

Whereas the dispensation of justice to and punishment of persons suspected of crime is not a matter to be dealt with by a group or groups of aroused and angry citizens having no regard or consideration for constitutional rights and no respect for the adopted and deliberate rules of evidence and procedure: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin earnestly requests and petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation which will effectively end the lynching or other destruction of persons accused or suspected of crime in any other way or by any other authority than by due process of law and by a duly constituted code of justice; and be it further

Whereas the experience in this State has demonstrated that an elective judiciary with a limited term increases rather than weakens the prestige of the judiciary and increases the confidence which the people have in the courts without impairing the quality of the judges: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to submit an amendment to the Federal Constitution under which all judges will be elected by the people of the districts in which they serve for terms of 10 years; be it further

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska, and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 2 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1931, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska at Juneau, the capital, this 29th day of April, A. D. 1931.

[SEAL.] KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

Senate Joint Memorial 2 (by Mr. Dunn and Mr. Lomen; committee substitute) in the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska

To the Congress of the United States, Department of Commerce, and Bureau of Fisheries:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represents that—

Whereas the present regulations prevent the inhabitants of the Yukon River Valley from canning or mild-curing salmon for the open market, thereby forcing them to dry their entire catch for dog feed; and

Whereas the market for dried fish being very limited as compared with previous years, the fisherman's means for gaining a livelihood for self and family on the Yukon River has almost vanished; and

Whereas the estimated average yearly catch of salmon on the Yukon River between the points of 35 miles above and 35 miles below the town of Tanana is 135 tons of dried fish, which catch can be maintained without danger of depletion, having a sale price of 8 cents per pound, or a total value of $21,600; and

Whereas a 10-pound salmon when dried weighs only 3 pounds, and approximately one-half of the salmon caught consist of kings and silvers, which would bring the highest price on the market if sold for human consumption. A fair estimate of the yearly loss to the people of this one section alone because of the prohibition placed on the preparation of the Yukon salmon for human consumption on the open market, based on a sale value of 15 cents per pound, is $56,700; and

Whereas the grand igloo of the pioneers, by resolution condemned the present wasteful practice of drying kings and silvers for dog feed, forced on the people along the Yukon by regulations, and requested the legislature to memorialize the Bureau of Fisheries to grant relief: Wherefore

Your memorialist prays that these people be granted the right and privilege of establishing local community canneries, limiting the pack to a point where there is no danger of depletion or be permitted to dispose of the first-class salmon in any manner whereby they may secure the highest market value for their product, thereby enabling them to secure a fair competence for their labors and assist materially in building up several prosperous villages along the Yukon River.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 6 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1931, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska at Juneau, the capital, this 20th day of April, A. D. 1931.

[SEAL.] KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

Senate Joint Memorial 6 (Mr. Bragaw and Mr. Dimond)

To the PRESIDENT,
To the CONGRESS, and
To the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represents:

The Alaska Railroad was greatly conceived with the thought that it would develop the Territory of Alaska in the same fashion that the great transcontinental railroads had developed and brought about the settlement of vast regions of the United States west of the Mississippi River. In this conception it was realized that the railroad for many years after construction would probably not pay the cost of operation. It was further realized that in order to make the railroad a success it would be necessary to actively stimulate and encourage the settlement of the public lands lying adjacent to the railroad and to foster and promote the cultivation and working of such lands by active aid from the United States so that the rigors confronting the initial pioneers and settlers might be lessened, and thus a prosperous and contented population dwell in the region of the railroad. Before this plan could be carried into effect, the World War and the vast economic and political difficulties arising from the war, turned the thoughts and energies of men elsewhere so that all of the plan for the Alaska Railroad and for its proper development were pushed aside and nothing was done except to build the railroad itself, no attempt being made to otherwise develop the region served by the railroad. In a frontier country like Alaska, it is obvious that great difficulties confront the early settlers and that they need every aid and encouragement if the land is to be settled and developed. In the past men were not blind to this fact, for, in this connection, it is to be borne in mind that the extensive grants of land to the western railroads, embracing in many cases mineral as well as agricultural lands, and the grants of other aid alone made possible the building of those roads; and that these grants so greatly exceeded in value the money heretofore spent by the United States on the Alaska Railroad that the latter sums seem trifling by comparison. It is to be further remembered that Alaska is economically cppressed by a system of conservation entirely unknown at the time of the building of the western railroads and the settlement of the domain which they traversed.

The original conception of the development of Alaska could still be made to bear fruit if men of broad vision would earnestly devote themselves to the project. This conception can not be furthered by a narrow-minded policy which insists that the railroad shall always and at all times pay the cost of its operation without regard to the effects thereof upon the settlement and development of the surrcunding region. This new policy of the Government, if it can be justly called a policy, put into effect at the last session of Congress, and resulting in a material raise in the rates of freight and passenger traffic over the Alaska Railroad, is bound to result in disaster to the railroad and to the people of Alaska, and such policy is moreover an abandonment of the statesmanlike and comprehensive plan under which the building of the railroad was commenced and the plan likewise which fostered the building of the western railroads.

The Alaska Railroad is now blessed with efficient management. The railroad has at its head in Alaska a man who has the vision, the energy, and the driving power to make the railroad a success. But his energy will be wasted and his efforts vain if the railroad is to be considered merely as a money-making institution, and it is sternly insisted that every day shall yield its pound of flesh in revenue. If the present policy, or lack of policy, continues for any great length of time, the case of the Alaska Railroad is indeed hopeless.

Wherefore your memorialist prays that the order recently made for increasing the rates on the Alaska Railroad be set aside and that the old rates be restored or lower rates be put into effect, and that a systematic plan for the aid of the Alaska Railroad be carried out, to the end that Alaska may be settled and developed in the same fashion as were the regions served by the great transcontinental railroads of the United States.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 8 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1931, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, the capital, this 6th day of May, A. D. 1931.

Secretary of Alaska.

Senate Joint Memorial 8 (by Mr. Dimond)

To the PRESIDENT,
To the CONGRESS, and
To the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
Delegate to Congress from Alaska.

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represents:

That the act of Congress of August 1, 1912 (37 Stat. 242), embraced in sections 129a, 129b, 129c, 129d, and 129e of the Compiled Laws of Alaska, relating to the location of placer-mining claims in the Territory of Alaska and the annual labor required thereon is retarding the proper development of the placer-mining industry of said Territory and no longer serves any useful purpose.

The Legislature of Alaska has passed an act (Senate bill 59) repealing said act of Congress, the same to be effective when approved by the Congress.

Wherefore your memorialist prays that the Congress approve said act of the Legislature of Alaska repealing the said act of Congress of August 1, 1912.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of Joint Memorial No. 1 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1931, with the original thereof and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska at Juneau, the capital, this 7th day of May, A. D. 1931.

[SEAL.] KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

Joint Memorial 1

To the CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES and
The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES and to The COMMISSIONER OF FISHERIES OF THE UNITED STATES:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represents:

That during the past few years the fur-farming industry in the Territory of Alaska, the Territory's infant industry, through the efforts of the individual residents of the Territory, under the most trying and adverse conditions, has been built up to a point where to-day there are approximately 500 licensed fur farms with a total investment of approximately $7,000,000.

That the greater majority—in fact, at least 90 per cent—of these fur farms have been established and maintained by the untiring efforts of individuals with little, if any, capital, derived in nearly all cases from the individual earnings of the fur farmers.

That in most cases, in order to carry on the business and maintain their respective farms, the individuals, who constitute the greater portion of Alaska's fur farmers, are obliged to seek employment during the summer months in order to be able to maintain their fur farms; that very few of these farms are on a self-sustaining basis and that most of these farms are operated by the owners themselves, they being unable to employ assistance.

That fish constitute a considerable portion of the diet of fur bearers but that under existing law fish taken for feeding fur-bearing animals are for commercial purposes just as are fish taken for human consumption, and all the limitations applicable to commercial fishing apply fully to fish taken for food of such animals.

That during the period in which commercial fishing is permitted in the waters of the Territory the majority of the fur farmers are engaged in earning a livelihood for themselves and their families and of sufficient funds to permit them to continue with their fur-farming ventures and are unable to secure and conserve a sufficient food supply for their animals.

Wherefore your memorialist prays that the existing law be so amended by Congress as to permit the taking of salmon for fur-bearing animal feed.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial No. 3 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1931, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, the capital, this 18th day of April, A. D. 1931.

House Joint Memorial 3 (by Mr. McCutcheon)

To the President and to the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in the tenth regular session assembled, respectfully represents that:

Whereas during the World War approximately 4,000 persons, residents of Alaska, enlisted or were inducted into the military and naval service of the United States, rendering therein excellent service; and

Whereas all or nearly all of the persons so serving with the forces of the United States made sacrifices by reason of such service above and beyond any sacrifices made by those who were unable or failed to undertake such service; and

Whereas it is fitting and proper that the Territory should render a grateful tribute to her sons and daughters who in time of danger took arms for the defense of their country; and

Whereas by reason of its limited powers and its reluctance to impose burdensome taxes on the people, already sufficiently taxed, it is impracticable for the Legislature of Alaska to pay Alaskan soldiers, sailors, or marines, or nurses any money, bonus, compensation, or reward, and the only practicable way of showing the gratitude of the country is by an act of Congress making a grant of lands in Alaska to the persons from Alaska who served in the World War; and

Whereas a grant of 160 acres of land to each of the persons from Alaska who served in the World War would not cover more than one-half of 1 per cent of the vacant and unoccupied lands of Alaska in which the title still remains in the United States:

We therefore pray that an act be passed by Congress and signed by the President granting each person from Alaska who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during the World War, 160 acres of land, to be selected by the grantee from any open or unappropriated public lands now subject to homestead entry, or one lode or placer mining claim of legal dimensions, and that no requirements of settlement, cultivation, labor, or improvement be imposed on the grantee, and that the right to take up and select such lands be made assignable and transferable, and that further provision be made giving to those entitled hereunder to the benefits of such grant but who are now nonresidents of Alaska or so situated as to make impracticable the location and selection of such lands in person, the right to locate and select such lands by attorney in fact under written power of attorney.

Provided further, that to be entitled to such grant persons shall have been bona fide residents of the Territory of Alaska who were regularly called, enlisted, drafted, inducted, or commissioned, and who served on active duty in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or Corps of Nurses of the United States between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918. Also, any such bona fide resident who being a citizen of the United States at the time of his entry therein, served on active duty in the army, navy, or air forces, or corps of nurses of the governments associated with the United States between those dates.

Persons who while in such service were separated therefrom under circumstances amounting to a dishonorable discharge and who have not been subsequently restored to honorable status are not entitled to grant hereunder.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

House Joint Memorial 4 (by Mr. Foster)

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.
To the Hon. RAY LYMAN WILBUR,
Secretary of the Interior.
To the CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.
To the CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.
To the CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.
To the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
Delegate to the Congress of the United States from the Territory of Alaska.

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in tenth regular session assembled, does most earnestly and respectfully represent that:

Whereas the population of the Territory of Alaska consists of approximately 60,000 inhabitants, equally divided between white people and peoples of the Indian and mixed races; and

Whereas the said Indian population of the Territory of Alaska comprises approximately one-seventh of that portion of the total Indian population of the United States treated as wards of the United States Government; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has for more than 100 years followed the policy of Federal aid to aboriginal peoples through reservations, grants of land, assistance in the purchase of farm machinery and equipment, maintenance of schools and hospitals, aid to the poor and needy, and through liberal Federal appropriations for other forms of relief; and

Whereas the recent Interior Department appropriation bill provides for an expenditure of a sum in excess of $22,000,000 for the continuation of its work among the Indians of the United States as a whole, of which said sum only a one-twentieth part thereof, or $1,125,000 has been allotted to the Territory of Alaska for education and medical relief; and

Whereas the Indians of the United States proper, by killing the early white settlers who attempted to dispossess them of their ancient hunting grounds, forced the United States Government to recognize their rights and to provide them with lands and other preferences which have, in many cases, made them prosperous, while the aborigines of Alaska, being of peaceable and law-abiding dispositions, have quietly pursued their humble occupations, while the white man took the best of their fishing grounds and trapping rights, until, with but a few exceptions, the 30,000 Indians of the Territory of Alaska find difficulty in providing themselves with the necessities of life, with the result that, and because of their peaceable dispositions and lives, the United States Government has taken but little interest in the aboriginal population of Alaska, has not provided adequate reservations for their use, nor has the Indian of Alaska been given intelligent aid to the end that he might learn to compete with the white man, nor been given proper medical attention; the truth of which statement is apparent from an examination of the records of vital statistics of the Territory of Alaska, said records showing that in the past 15 years the death rate due to tuberculosis among Indians and those of mixed blood, is 36½ per cent, as against 1.7 per cent due to the same cause in the United States proper; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior, testifying before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, has recently (November, 1930) stated the policy of his department to be to turn over to the various States and Territories the responsibility for the control and operation of the schools, hospitals, and other relief organizations among the Indians, as is shown by the following statement appearing on page 11, Interior Department appropriation bill, 1932: (By Secretary Wilbur.) "We have put about one-half the Indians into the white schools now, and we are paying for some of them but not for all. In other words, we are trying to transfer them over to the public-school system if we can do that, and transfer them to the public-health system, and to the general hospitals, instead of building too many buildings of our own. If we can do that, that would help." That this policy of the Interior Department has been in effect in Alaska for some time, as may be seen from the following facts taken from the record of the Territorial Commissioner of Education of Alaska: "That in 71 schools, being all of the schools of the Territory of Alaska maintained and operated outside of incorporated towns, there are 1,608 pupils, of which number 369 are white, the remaining 1,239 being pupils of Indian or mixed blood; that there are 3,468 pupils in 17 schools operated by the Territory in incorporated towns, of whom 3,046 are of white blood and 422 of Indian or mixed blood; that the total percentage of white children in all the schools supported by the Territory of Alaska is not more than 68 per cent; furthermore, that of the funds of the Territory of Alaska appropriated for medical and indigent relief, excluding the Pioneers' Home and the pioneer's pension, approximately 90 per cent is expended among the Indians; and

Whereas the total income of the Territory of Alaska received from license taxes amounts to practically the same amount as is being appropriated each year by the Government of the United States for its work among the Alaska Indians; any further increase in such territorial taxation would, in the opinion of your memorialist, result not only in crippling the present industries of the Territory but in preventing and discouraging the formation and establishment of new industries in Alaska; and beyond the bare necessities for the support of the territorial government of Alaska and for the education of the white children of the Territory and the relief of the aged and disabled among the white population; and

Whereas a continuation of the policy outlined by the Secretary of the Interior, whereby the Federal Government seeks to avoid responsibility for this great proportion of its wards residing in the Territory and to place said burden upon the territorial government of this sparsely populated area, can result only in retarding the development of Alaska through excessive taxation and in the driving out of the Territory the industries already established therein;

Now, therefore, your memorialist earnestly prays that the policy of the Interior Department, as declared by the Secretary, be relaxed as to the Territory of Alaska; and

That the Interior Department increase appropriations for the care of the Indians in said Territory to an amount proportionate to the ratio which the Alaska Indian population bears to the total number of such wards of the Government of the United States as a whole; and

That the Interior Department provide hospitalization, doctors, nurses, quarantine funds, and other medical service adequate to care for said people; and

That orphan asylums be established; and

That a system of education be established which will train the aboriginal inhabitants of Alaska so that they may successfully compete in those vocations such as boat building, carpentry, gas engineering, wood and ivory carving, basket weaving, and other kindred pursuits as to the male population, and sewing, cooking, nursing, and personal hygiene as to the females, and thus that the aborigines may become a happy, contented, self-supporting, self-respecting people; and

To the further end that the white population of the Territory of Alaska be not oppressed and overburdened beyond its ability and capacity, and that its development be not restricted by responsibilities justly the care of the United States Government, and to the end that it may be permitted to develop normally and become a prosperous unit of these United States of America.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

House Joint Memorial 5 (by Mr. Nylen)

To the Congress of the United States, Department of Commerce, and the Bureau of Fisheries:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in tenth regular session assembled, respectfully represents that:

Whereas the waters of southeastern and southwestern Alaska have received considerable attention by the Bureau of Fisheries and the private interests of the fishing industry, but this work has not been extended to the northern waters; and

Whereas the present halibut and cod banks are being rapidly depleted and it is now necessary for our fishermen to go great distances to secure a catch, many, in fact, entering Bering Sea; and

Whereas it is a generally known fact that there are extensive banks of halibut, cod, and other food fish in the Bering Sea, Kotzebue Sound, and Arctic waters, but concerning which there is no reliable data now available; and

Whereas a thorough survey of these waters will undoubtedly encourage the building up of several large fishing communities along their shores:

Therefore your memorialist prays that plans be prepared and funds secured to make such survey as soon as possible, thereby assisting materially in the development of this great industry.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

House Joint Memorial 6 (by Mr. Ziegler)

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in regular session assembled, respectfully represents:

Whereas the quantity of salmon caught in the waters of Alaska by means of the floating and standing fish trap is gradually increasing; and

Whereas the packers of canned salmon have announced a curtailment of their packs for the season of 1931 now approaching which will eliminate the necessity of using seine-caught fish, and as a result of which the fishermen and seiners will be deprived of an opportunity to earn a livelihood; and

Whereas the use of the fish trap in the salmon-fishing industry militates prejudicially against the development of the Territory and has and will continue to retard the upbuilding of a permanent population in the Territory; and

Whereas it is becoming increasingly more difficult for the local fishermen and seiners to earn a livelihood from their vocation; and

Whereas great and general dissatisfaction exists among the people of Alaska over the manner in which the fisheries of the Territory are being regulated, and it is believed by the people of the Territory that the ends of justice would be better served were the legislature of the Territory given the same powers over the subject as were formerly possessed by other Territories and are now possessed by the States; and

Whereas the people of Alaska have the welfare of their country at heart and are fully capable of administering their own affairs:

Therefore, your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States, pending the time when full Territorial form of government shall be granted, to so amend the existing fisheries laws of Alaska as to permit the legislature to prescribe and define the apparatus and methods to be employed in the catching and taking of salmon in the waters of Alaska and to give to the Territory full power and authority to administer the fisheries to that extent.

House Joint Memorial 7 (by Mr. Foster)

To the Congress of the United States, Department of Commerce, and the Bureau of Fisheries:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in tenth regular session assembled, respectfully represents that:

Whereas the waters of the Territory of Alaska abound in valuable food fish of which a very limited commercial use has been made as compared to the ultimate development of such resource given an adequate survey and examination of the same, which survey has never been made; and

Whereas the present fishing season of Alaska continues but a short period, leaving the fishing population of this Territory without occupation for the greater part of the year; and

Whereas an adequate survey and mapping of the waters of the Territory would, in the opinion of your memorialist, disclose vast banks of spider or king crab, additional halibut and cod banks, shrimp, and many other varieties of useful marine products.

Therefore your memorialist prays that funds be provided for a comprehensive survey of the waters adjacent to the coast of Alaska from its southern boundary to the Arctic Ocean.

House Joint Memorial 9 (by Mr. Winn)

To Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represents:

That by far the greatest part of the legal business in the Territory of Alaska is transacted in the courts of the United States commissioners, that these officials are remunerated for their services by fees paid by the litigants, that this system has proved nefarious and inadequate, and so much so that in the larger number of precincts it has been found impossible to secure the services of competent men for those positions;

That your memorialist considers the present archaic system decidedly unsuited to the conditions of the Territory and a menace to its people.

Now, therefore, your memorialist prays that proper legislation be enacted to the end that the commissioners appointed for the various precincts in Alaska be paid a fixed salary.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

House Joint Memorial 11 (by Mr. Hellerich and Mr. Allyn)

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES and
To the CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES and
To the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
Delegate to Congress from Alaska.

The Alaska Legislature has repealed the Alaska bone-dry law, chapter 53 of the Public Laws of the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session (39 Stat. 903–909).

There is substantial doubt upon the question of whether the Alaska Legislature is authorized to do this.

Your memorialist represents that the action taken by the legislature was not taken either to indorse or repudiate prohibition, but was taken solely to promote the interest of humanity.

The Alaska bone-dry law is not an enforcement act, since there are no Territorial enforcement officers. The law-enforcement machinery of the Territory is entirely in the hands of the Federal Government, so that the Volstead Act can be made to serve every purpose required of a prohibition law.

The most serious objection to the Alaska bone-dry law lies in the fact that it prevents the use of intoxicating beverages for medicinal purposes. When the law was first adopted it was supposed that medicinal liquors could, notwithstanding the provisions of the law, be supplied under the general statutes of the United States, but the courts held otherwise. This did not at first present a very serious situation, for the reason that there were in the Territory many small private stocks from which medicinal liquors could be supplied, and later, when these became exhausted, the situation was met by supplying the hospitals and physicians with liquors taken from the liquors which were seized by prohibition officers. This was, of course, illegal; but under the circumstances no one could attach any blame to the action taken by the officials; it was advisable in order to save human life and therefore justifiable. The people of Alaska are at the present time so situated that medicinal liquors can no longer be obtained.

We are not unmindful of the fact that there are those who maintain that intoxicating liquors have no medicinal value. It is not a question of whether such persons are right or wrong, for in matters such as this no man can have the right to set up his judgment as against that of the sick person's physician. Many believe that medicinal drugs are not only useless but harmful, yet no legislative body would because of this be justified in prohibiting the use of such drugs. The principle is the same in either case, and the responsibility assumed by the legislator is also the same in either case. It is so grave that we do not believe that any legislator can be justified in assuming it, even though he conscientiously believes that intoxicating liquors are lacking in medicinal value.

Wherefore your memorialist prays that the Congress approve the act of the Legislature of Alaska for the repeal of the Alaska bone-dry law and that the Congress make proper provision for the enforcement of the national prohibition act in the courts of the commissioners and ex officio justices of the peace of Alaska as to all offenses within the jurisdiction of said justices' courts, or that the Congress grant to the Legislature of Alaska the power to make such provision for the enforcement of the national prohibition act.

House Joint Memorial 12 (by Mr. Hellerich)

To the PRESIDENT AND THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in tenth regular session assembled, do most respectfully represent that—

Whereas mining is the basic industry of the Territory of Alaska and upon which a high percentage of the population, trades, and traffic of the Territory are directly or indirectly dependent; and

Whereas approximately 98 per cent of the area of Alaska is public land largely under the jurisdiction and control of the Interior Department and the development and utilization of the mineral resources within which are matters of concern and responsibility on the part of the Government of the United States; and

Whereas these vast areas of public land are not subject to taxation by the Territory of Alaska, and therefore yield no revenue to the Territorial treasury; and

Whereas the future development of the agricultural industry of the interior of Alaska depends almost entirely on the development of the mining industry; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance in the continued growth of the mining industry that authentic information be secured and disseminated as to the economic importance and commercial availability of the mineral resources of the Territory and as to the extent and significance of the development of such resources, and that all possible assistance be given to prospectors in their search for and development of valuable mineral substances and in making contact with prospective investors in mining prospects; and

Whereas we are informed that such important mining States of the West as California and Idaho and also the Province of British Columbia in Canada, realizing the importance to their mining industries of services such as those above outlined, maintain and liberally support extensive organizations in the form of mining bureaus and departments charged with the duty of gathering such data and rendering such services, and we believe such services are of equal or even greater importance in Alaska; and

Whereas during each of the past two biennnia the Territory of Alaska has appropriated $20,000 as a fund to assist in defraying the field and office expenses of mining engineers of the United States Bureau of Mines and Geological Survey assigned by the Interior Department to duty in Alaska for the purposes of making mining investigations, assisting prospectors, and the inspection of mines under the direction of the supervising mining engineer for those bureaus in Alaska; and

Whereas from the year 1922 to July 1, 1925, the said Bureau of Mines assigned to duty in Alaska three mining engineers besides the supervising mining engineer and allotted for their salaries and expenses in making such mining investigations the sum appropriated by the Congress for such work in the amount of $22,000 per annum, as a result of which very valuable service was rendered to the mining industry of Alaska; and

Whereas on July 1, 1925, the engineers and funds available for making mining investigations and conducting mine inspection in Alaska were transferred from the Bureau of Mines to the Geological Survey, since which time the appropriations and funds allotted thereunder and the personnel of engineers assigned to making mining investigations, assisting prospectors, and conducting mine inspection in Alaska from time to time have been reduced and curtailed until the sum so allotted for such work now amounts to only $4,500 per annum, and part of the services of the supervising mining engineer, who has other important duties, are alone available for such work within the entire Territory, and a large part of the funds appropriated by the Territory to assist in defraying the field and office expenses of this important work have remained unexpended on account of the removal by the Government of three engineers as above recited, and the appropriation thereof has thereby been rendered futile and of no avail; and

Whereas the services of at least two additional mining engineers are urgently necessary in order to properly and effectively conduct mining investigations, assist prospectors, and conduct mine inspection in the Territory, and the Territory is willing to continue to appropriate as heretofore its proper share of the expense of such services other than salaries;

Now, therefore, we, your memorialist, earnestly urge your honorable body to appropriate sufficient funds to pay the salaries and a reasonable proportion of the expenses of two additional mining engineers and that the proper departmental executive officers be authorized and directed to assign and maintain such engineers in Alaska for the purpose of performing the duties necessary in adequately carrying on the work hereinbefore described; and that the said departmental executive officers be further authorized to cooperate with the Territory of Alaska in conducting said work.

House Joint Memorial 13 (by Mr. Nerland)

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and the Secretary of War:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in tenth biennial session assembled, respectfully represents that

Whereas there was introduced in the Congress of the United States at its last session a bill authorizing the sale of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system of the United States of America, now being operated in Alaska by the Signal Corps, United States Army, to private parties; and,

Whereas in the opinion of your memorialist, private parties purchasing the same will be unable to operate any system or systems of cable or telegraph service in Alaska that will afford to the Government of the United States and the residents of Alaska an efficient cable and telegraph service; and,

Whereas in the development of the Territory there is a constantly increasing demand for radio service to and from far-distant points to which airplane service alone is practical and expedient:

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully prays that the aforesaid military cable and telegraph system be retained and operated by the Signal Corps of the United States Army to the end that there be a continuance of efficient cable and telegraph service in the Territory of Alaska available as heretofore for purposes of the United States Government and for commercial use by the residents of the Territory under such rules and regulations as may be established in the due administration of such an important public necessity, and your memorialist will ever pray; be it

To the CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES and
To the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
Delegate from the Territory of Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in tenth regular session assembled, does most earnestly and respectfully represent that:

Whereas the Department of Commerce of the United States has for many years operated the seal fisheries of the Pribilof Islands, located in this Territory, from which operation there is annually received a sum in excess a quarter of a million ($250,000) dollars; and

Whereas the Territory of Alaska is annually expending more than $200,000 for the care and education of Indian and Eskimo wards of the Government, which said sum places an excessive burden upon the people of this Territory and one which its limited taxable resources are hardly able to bear; and

Whereas the Forestry Bureau operating in the Territory has for many years paid a certain proportion of its receipts into the common-school fund of the Territory:

Now, therefore, your memorialist earnestly prays, that a law be enacted to the effect that the Department of Commerce shall annually pay to the Territory of Alaska for the benefit of the common-school funds therein a sum equal to 50 per cent of the amount received from the share of the United States in the operations of said seal fisheries.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Passed by the house April 27, 1931.

GROVER C. WINN,
Speaker of the House.

LAWRENCE KERR,
Chief Clerk of the House.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY FOR THE TERRITORY.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial No. 20, Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1931, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the Territory of Alaska, at Juneau, the capital, this 9th day of May, A. D. 1931.

KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

House Joint Memorial 20 (by Mr. Allyn)

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represents:

That in proportion to population no part of the world is more dependent on aviation than the people of Alaska, and none avail themselves more of that means of conveyance in business pursuits; that neither the United States Army nor Navy has any aviation station or landing field in Alaska; that frequently the Army and Navy have been called upon to aid in the search of lost aviators, but have been unable to respond because of lack of necessary equipment suitable for the North; that not only for the sake of the industrial development of the Territory, but for proper national defense in case of war is the establishment of national aviation stations and large landing fields necessary in Alaska.

Wherefore your memorialist respectfully urges that the proper legislation be passed to authorize the United States Army and Navy to establish adequate aviation stations and landing fields in Alaska, and maintain one or more squadrons of airships in the Territory at all times ready to respond to call when needed.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Passed by the house April 29, 1931.

Speaker of the House.

Our Heavenly Father, just and holy is Thy name, and all Thy works proclaim Thy glory! Again we tarry at Thy footstool and praise Thee that the zone of Thy fatherhood, in its sympathies and provisions, is as wide as the races of men. Let us hear Thy whisper, for when it is heard a new hope and faith spring within us. May we listen until we feel and catch its note. Keep our hearts from withering toward our fellow men, and make our labor a constant joy. Graciously regard our Speaker, and lead us forth with a splendid ambition to be fully equal to our tasks. Endue us with that wisdom that shall dominate our country and finally lead the world. O Divine Heart, send Thy loving messenger to all our hearthstones and dwell with our loved ones and bless them with perfect peace and rest. In the name of the world's Saviour we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MINORITY LEADER

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Republican conference, at its meeting yesterday, unanimously elected Hon. BERTRAND H. SNELL, a Member of this House from New York, as Republican floor leader. [Applause.]

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I present Hon. KENT E. KELLER, of Illinois, who desires to take the oath of office.

The oath of office was administered to Hon. KENT E. KELLER, of the twenty-fifth district of Illinois.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to report that the committee of three appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join a like committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses was assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make has discharged that duty, and the President advised us that he would communicate with the House in writing to-day.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

THE RULES

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution which was pending when the House adjourned yesterday; and I would like to get an agreement as to debate on the resolution.

We are perfectly agreeable to any reasonable time for debate, but we would like to get an agreement that at the end of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered. What time can the gentleman suggest for his side of the House?

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman stated to me yesterday he would not yield for the purpose of offering amendments. Is the gentleman still of the same opinion?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. Does the gentleman intend to yield us 30 minutes on this side?

Mr. POU. I will yield 30 minutes and even more if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. PURNELL. No; that is plenty. I would say to the gentleman from North Carolina I would like to have yielded to me 30 minutes, but not with the understanding that at the conclusion of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered. I will say, frankly, to the gentleman from North Carolina that that will perhaps be our only method of offering amendments. We have two valid amendments which I think should appeal to the Members of the House and upon which the House should have an opportunity to express itself.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I shall yield him 30 minutes to be used as he sees fit. At the end of that time, if the gentleman can not agree that the previous question may be considered as ordered, of course, I will have to move the previous question. I only yield for debate.

Mr. PURNELL. I understand.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that unanimous consent is necessary. I believe I have one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one hour.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I am going to yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Indiana to be yielded by him as he sees fit. I yield myself five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, 31 years ago I was a Member of this House under what I may term a one-man oligarchy. For 10 years following my entrance into the House the House of Representatives had tied itself hand and foot and delivered itself to the Speaker. The House was under the control of a Committee on Rules, composed of three men, the Speaker, a gentleman from his side of the House, and one man from the minority side.

Time and again I have seen the Speaker call the majority Member back of the Speaker's desk and decide upon a rule, and, after agreeing upon the rule, they would notify the minority Member what was done, and the Republican Member would read his rule, sometimes written in longhand on the back of an envelope, and the House would proceed to act.

I actually saw this, Mr. Speaker. It is hard to believe, but the records of the House will bear me out. I saw the two majority members of the Committee on Rules report a rule to this House for the consideration of a measure, and when the rule was adopted and the language of the rule was carefully examined, bless goodness, they found it not only provided for the consideration of the measure but actually passed the measure. [Laughter.]

There has been constant protest against this manner of considering legislation. The protest has continued all during the years. After 1910, when the Democrats came into power in this body, there was considerable liberalization of the rules, and now the Democratic caucus has agreed upon what is known as the Crisp discharge rule, and I was instructed to report that as an amendment to the rules of the House, which I took pleasure in doing.

This discharge rule provides for the discharge of committees, under certain circumstances. It even provides for the discharge of the Committee on Rules. I have no objection to that. As long as I am at the head of the Rules Committee there is not going to be any "sitting on the lid." [Applause.] I am willing at any time, if any gentleman thinks the Rules Committee is attempting to stifle legislation, to have you put your discharge rule into operation. This is also what the proposed change does with respect to other committees. I may say that this matter will be discussed in detail by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and, perhaps, by other gentlemen on this side.

The Crisp discharge rule also provides, in another paragraph, for the calling together of committees where the chairman refuses to call the committee together. Surely, nobody objects to this.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two minutes more. Another provision of the Crisp rule is that providing for action by the conferees when they refuse to act. Surely, nobody can object to that. These are the three high spots in the Crisp amendment to the rules of the House—the discharge of committees, the calling of committees together, and compelling the conferees to act.

Now, gentlemen, a good deal has been said about amendments to this Crisp amendment to the rules. We are willing to stand or fall by the action taken by the Democratic caucus. I believe an overwhelming majority of the House is in favor of the proposed liberalization of the rules. I will say that if the discharge rule is not workable then the Rules Committee will promptly give consideration to any amendment that may be deemed necessary to make the discharge rule workable. [Applause.]

I now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, this is the day I long have looked forward to—a Democratic Speaker, this House under Democratic rule, carrying out the great principle of democracy that a majority shall rule, and the adoption of rules with sufficient authority and so adjusted that they shall be rules for the entire House, not to meet any political exigency of any party but to insure the fundamental right of democracy that a majority of the House may work its will under the terms of those rules. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, my time is short and I do not wish for applause.

The rules that are presented here to-day are exactly the rules, word for word, that were presented by me in the last Congress and debated with the distinguished majority leader on the floor of this House with only one change—the number that is required to initiate a motion to discharge being changed from 100, as originally written, to 145. These rules, I say to you, absolutely make it possible beyond the peradventure of doubt for the majority of the House to call up and consider and pass any measure it desires to pass. And I stake any little reputation I may have among my colleagues as to knowing the rules of the House that these rules will work and that they will not cause disorderly procedure but will insure orderly procedure and at the same time insure that a majority of this House can function.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, every rule that I urged last January is included in this motion, except the rule dealing with the consideration of the Private Calendar. No questions of fundamentals is involved in that; it is a matter as to which is the best way to consider the Private Calendar. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] has a plan to relieve the House of that drudgery, as has the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], and others, and it may be a better method can be found than the rule I discussed last January for the Private Calendar. That rule I discussed last January is 99¾ per cent the rule the Republican conference proposes to-day for the Private Calendar.

I have made no suggestion relative to the Consent Calendar. The question of the fundamental principle of majority rule is not involved in that, because it is the Consent Calendar. It takes practically the unanimous consent of the House, and even under the rule proposed by the Republican conference five men can stop it. Fundamental principles are not involved, so that we may brush them aside.

There are four essential changes which I propose in these rules. First, that a majority of the members of the standing committees of this House can meet and work whenever a majority of a committee desires to do so. The Republican conference proposes that rule that I advocated last January word for word. I advocated amending the rule as to Calendar Wednesday so as to give the committees a better chance to be heard under Calendar Wednesday rule, because it was apparent and is a fact that some of the committees had not been called under the Calendar Wednesday rule for six years. Last year I proposed to change from two to one day that a standing committee might have for the consideration of a bill under this rule. I proposed also that when the call was made, commencing at the beginning of the lists of committees, if, during that session, it was not completed, at the next session of the House we should commence the call where it was left off the preceding session, instead of going back to the beginning.

The Republican conference reports that provision with a change cutting down debate from an hour on a side to 30 minutes on a side, which is an immaterial matter as no principle is involved.

I propose another very vital fundamental change to insure the majority control which the Republican conference did not act upon, to wit, a rule making it possible to deal with recalcitrant conferees, and make them subject to and amenable to this House, that rule being that when conferees shall have been appointed for 20 days and shall not have made a report, it shall be a privileged motion to move to discharge them and to appoint new conferees and to instruct. The rule provides also that during the last six days of a session those rights to discharge and instruct and appoint new conferees can be made after the conferees have been appointed for 36 hours. You all recall how in Congresses past the conferees defied the House on the Norris lame-duck resolution, how they defied it on Muscle Shoals, and how they defied it during the last hours of the last session on the bill for the veterans' hospital. Under the old rules if nine-tenths of the Members of this House desired to instruct conferees, they are impotent as babies to do so unless the Speaker would recognize them to move to suspend the rules, or the Committee on Rules would bring in a resolution authorizing the House to deal with them. Is that democratic, or is it consistent with the American form of government? No. Under the rule proposed to-day you have them absolutely within the control and authority of this House.

I come now to the remaining fundamental, the discharge rule, and it is, word for word, the rule that I proposed, to discharge committees, when I was in the minority last January. That rule has two separate, distinct methods of procedure to discharge the committee, not related to each other, absolutely divorced from each other, and a Member can proceed to discharge the committee under either one of those methods. The Republican conference adopted one of those methods, the weaker method for discharge. They liberalized as little as possible to meet their political exigencies. They adopted the old rule that I had the honor of drawing in the Sixty-eighth Congress under which the Howell-Barkley bill was discharged and which was filibustered in the House so that we could never get action. Why? Because the Speaker and those in the chair entertained dilatory motions, would not bring the matter to a conclusion, permitted delays, and the bill could not be finally passed, and I then learned my lesson. I profited by that experience. I knew that history might repeat itself. I determined to evolve, to the very best of my ability, a rule that could not be filibustered, that could not be circumvented, giving the House a chance to discharge a committee and put a bill on its passage; and the second method in this rule which you have before you to-day will absolutely accomplish that purpose. The Republican conference even weakened that first method, because, while they say it shall be unfinished business, they have an innocent little clause in there saying it does not supervene the right to make a preferential motion, when it is up, to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider appropriation or revenue bills. That weakness even is not in the first method proposed in the rule the Democrats present to you for consideration.

Let us come to the second, and the second is a method that will work. What does it do? It makes it in order to discharge the Committee on Rules from a rule providing for the special consideration of any bill or resolution. The discharge rule of the Republican conference is as silent as the tomb on that, and that is a provision which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] last February, in debating with me, said would destroy the Committee on Rules; it made the Committee on Rules the servant of the House, and there would be no need for a Committee on Rules with such a rule. He admitted it would work. Let us see how it would work.

Were I to seek to discharge a standing committee from the consideration of any bill, that is the method I would adopt. It does not require two petitions. You can start your petition with 145, under the first method to discharge a standing committee, or you can start your petition to discharge the Committee on Rules from a special rule providing for the consideration of a bill. That is what I would do. I would introduce a resolution providing that immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on the Judiciary, for example, should be discharged from further consideration of a certain bill. I would say that there should be two hours' debate, and after that it should be considered under the 5-minute rule. At a certain hour the committee should rise and report to the House. The Speaker should not entertain any dilatory motions. It should be unfinished business, considered from day to day until final disposition of it. I would send that to the Committee on Rules. You can not introduce that resolution until the committee which has had the bill has had it for 30 days, so as to give that committee ample opportunity to consider the merits of the bill. Then, the standing committee having had that bill for 30 days, you introduce this resolution and send it to the Rules Committee, and if they do not report within seven days, you can have a discharge rule against the Committee on Rules on that resolution. Then, on the second and fourth Mondays you can call up that discharge rule, and if a majority of the House adopts that motion to discharge the committee, the question would come for the House to adopt a rule to consider it. If the House adopted it, then the House would instanter proceed to consider that bill under the terms of that resolution, all dilatory motions being cut out, just the same as they would be if the chairman of the Rules Committee came in here with a favorable report for a special order of business for the consideration of a bill, and the standing committee would have been discharged from further consideration of the bill, and the bill would be before the House for consideration. It would not be necessary to have two petitions.

Now, I would like especially to stress to my friends of the press that 145 does not discharge a committee. The opponents of this rule say that that 145 would permit "unbaked legislation." Such is not the case. The 145 is simply the number necessary to initiate the right for the House itself to vote twice a month as to whether or not it will discharge a committee. To discharge a committee it would be necessary to have a majority of the membership of the House voting, a quorum being present. As this rule can only come up two days in a month, the motion to discharge will have to be on the calendar seven days, and the membership of the House will know it, will be here, and, in my judgment, it will always require 200 or more voting in the affirmative to discharge a committee, but it is within the power of the 145 to put the House on record.

Now, gentlemen, one burning question in this country is prohibition, and I am perfectly willing to face a vote on that or any other matter. [Applause.] This rule gives that right. I would not propose a rule that would lead to confusion or that would make the House of Representatives ridiculous, or that would enable people to pile up motion after motion on the same subject and have many votes on it. Therefore, in this rule I have tried to tie it down, that where a motion to discharge had been perfected, and the House had voted once on that subject matter, as far as this discharge rule is concerned, it would be res adjudicata for that session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia three additional minutes.

Mr. CRISP. That would not stop the committee from making a favorable report and the House from considering it.

Now, I want to be very fair. Let us take the prohibition question. I think that if this rule is adopted, and there were 10 bills introduced to amend the Volstead Act, for beer of 1 per cent, 2 per cent, 3 per cent, or 4 per cent alcohol, if one of those beer bills was voted on, you could not vote, under the discharge rule, during the same session on the other beer bills. I think under the rule it would not preclude having a motion to discharge on a proposed constitutional amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment. When you had voted on one constitutional repeal, that settles it for that session of Congress, and that is all the public has a right to know about. They have a right to know how you and I stand on it. That is all the people in your district are entitled to know. There is no use keeping on voting on the same thing over and over.

There is one provision that the Republican rule does not affect. The rules which I propose will also deal with this situation: Suppose a committee reports favorably to the House a public bill. It is not privileged, and you can not get it up for consideration. This rule says you can file against the Rules Committee a special rule, making it in order to consider that bill favorably reported and on the calendar, which the responsible authorities will not allow to come up. It puts it in the power of the House to work its will. It puts it in the power of the minority to work out its program and have the House go on record, and it is the duty of the majority to take that responsibility.

I welcome the minority's program. I hope you will propose one. This rule gives you an opportunity to do so. If it is like your programs in the past, I am quite willing to vote against it, and our majority will vote against it, and yet you can have your record known to the country.

That is all these rules will do. They are democratic. They put it in the power of the majority of this House to carry out its will, whether that majority is made up of Democrats, Progressives, Republicans, or any other party. These rules are made in keeping with the spirit of democracy, in keeping with the spirit of the Constitution of the United States that the majority may rule; and with these rules there can be no hue and cry throughout the land that the House of Representatives is gagged by a triumvirate. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia who, as we all know, is one of the best parliamentarians this House has ever produced. [Applause.] I want to say at the outset, speaking for the minority which now sits on this side of the aisle, that we join with you in this effort to liberalize the rules of this House. Lest there may be some misunderstanding, as is evidenced by muffled chuckles on the other side of the aisle, let me say to you that the Republicans in conference last February instructed the Republican members of the Rules Committee to devote this summer, or such part of it as might be necessary, to the preparation of a program looking toward the liberalization of the rules of the House for presentation this fall. And let it be remembered that those instructions were given by the Republican conference to the Republican members of the Rules Committee at a time when you yourselves [addressing the Democratic side of the House] did expect to organize this House. [Applause.] This is therefore no eleventh-hour conversion occasioned by the fact that we are now in the minority. When our Republican conference met in February and decided to take some definite action upon the matter of liberalizing our rules we fully expected to have our own party represented in that chair and to be in the majority on this side. I make this statement to show that our effort was made in good faith. Fate has decreed otherwise. While the gentleman from Georgia says this is the day he long has sought, it is likewise the day we did not expect. [Laughter.]

Many of the proposals here are identical, and I may say for the benefit of the new Members—most of whom are on that side—that the purpose of this whole procedure is to adopt some rules for this House. At present we have no rules under which to operate. The proposal here is to adopt the rules which prevailed in the last session of Congress, with the amendments offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, the new chairman of the Rules Committee. We also present some amendments, and I may say frankly that the suggestions which are offered by the Democratic side and the Republican side are in the main identical, with the exception that we offer some specific amendments for the benefit of the Consent and Private Calendars.

Our discharge rules are not exactly the same, as the gentleman from Georgia has pointed out. But if he is willing that his discharge rule shall go as far as it does toward stripping the Rules Committee of this House of its power, that is up to him and his party, and it is within your province to adopt his suggestions. I shall therefore discuss only the two proposals which we seek to have added to the proposed amendments. They are with reference to the Consent Calendar and the Private Calendar. Let me state briefly to the Members of the House, particularly the new Members, what it is proposed to do under our proposed amendments. Two objections instead of one will be required under our plan before the consideration of a bill on the Consent Calendar may be stopped, and five objections, instead of three, will be required when the bill is again called for consideration. If when the bill is again called for consideration five objections are heard, then the old rule operates, and in that case the bill goes off of the calendar, and can not thereafter be placed upon it. That, we think, is a distinct improvement over the old rule.

Another suggestion has to do with the Private Calendar. Our proposal—and I present it as a member of the Rules Committee, at the suggestion of our Republican conference—presents an entirely new rule for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. In brief, our proposal makes it mandatory, not optional, that the House shall consider bills on the Private Calendar on the second and fourth Saturdays of each month. When a bill is called and no objection is heard it is immediately read for amendment and the question put on laying the bill aside for favorable recommendation. If objection is heard the rule provides for 20 minutes of debate, 10 minutes on each side, during which time the merits of the bill can be discussed.

After the debate of 20 minutes the Chair will then ask if there is objection, and unless five objections are heard the bill will be considered for amendment. If five objections are made after the 20 minutes of debate shall have passed, then the bill is passed over and all of the remaining bills on the calendar of that date are called before those bills to which objection has been heard can again be considered. When all of the bills that were on the calendar on the day the five objections were lodged against it have been called, then the Chair will, under our proposal, return to the bills which have been objected to. When they are called this time, unless the question of consideration is raised, the Committee of the Whole proceeds to consider the bill under the 5-minute rule. If the question of consideration is raised we provide in our resolution for 10 minutes of debate, 5 on each side. If the question of consideration is decided in the negative, the bill is laid aside until the committee rises, when it is reported to the House with an adverse recommendation. Any bill so reported is automatically recommitted to the committee reporting it and can not be again reported during the same Congress.

The only opportunity the House will have to-day to express itself upon these two vital proposals now offered by this side of the Chamber will be by voting down the previous question. The gentleman from North Carolina has indicated to-day, as he did yesterday, that he will not recognize this side of the House to offer any amendments. Therefore, in the interest of the liberalization of these rules and in order to protect the individual rights of the Members on both sides of this Chamber and give the widest latitude consistent with reason, I want to seriously urge that the previous question be voted down, in order that we may have the opportunity to at least present these two proposals. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] gives full credit to the Democratic side of the House for the presentation of the present rules which liberalize the old rules, and I thank that side of the House. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] gives credit to the Republican side of the House for initiating the movement which resulted in the amendments we are now considering, and I thank the gentlemen who sit on that side. But now, gentlemen, I want to thank the small group of determined Members on both sides of the House who have been fighting for these amendments for the past 10 years, and have really forced both sides to bring them in.

In all fairness, I want to say that when it looked as if the Republicans would organize the House I contacted the Rules Committee, when it was sure that if they did organize they would require every vote, and opened negotiations, and we were then given absolute assurance that these amendments would be acceptable. When conditions changed the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] gave us assurance that the changes would come from his side. I want to say to the new Members that this indicates the usefulness of our small group that for 10 years has been protesting, and I say also that this pill is as bitter to swallow to some Members on the Democratic side as it is to some of the older Members on the other side.

The two discharge rules will once and for all give us the opportunity to test whether or not a real discharge rule is workable. Personally, I will say that the discharge rule suggested by the gentleman from Georgia is preferable, because it provides an alternative method. As against that he limits the discharge to one subject matter, while the rule of the Republican side limits it to a specific bill. This phase of the rule will be tested in the ruling which we will receive from time to time from the Chair as to what is a similar, substantive subject matter. So, I take it, gentlemen, this House, on the public assurances made by the Republican conference and the Democratic conference, is honor bound to-day to pass this discharge rule.

The change in the rules providing machinery for a committee to operate, of course, is satisfactory, and the gentleman from Georgia has covered that phase of it completely.

The conferees' rule, I believe, is very necessary. I attempted to have our side of the House adopt it, but we failed. This also should be adopted.

Gentlemen, there is a great deal of misapprehension going through the country as to the discharge rule. I still believe that 100 is the logical number, but it is wrong to send out propaganda that 100 men can control the House. All that this rule does is to give 145 Members of the House power to offset anything that 13 members of a committee now have the power to do. This is all there is to it. In other words, under existing rules, 13 members of a committee may prevent this House from considering a bill, although a majority desires its consideration. This change provides the machinery whereby 145 men can move the 13 members of a committee and bring the bill before the House.

I trust, gentlemen, that to-day, whether the previous question is voted down or is voted up, we will pass the amendments offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and give the liberalization of the rules a real test in this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to claim or to disclaim credit in respect of the pending proposal. It is, however, my sincere regret that the gentlemen on my right have not seen fit to take up an equally serious branch of this subject to which the Republican conference addressed itself, with the result that it made certain proposals which would have in effect liberalized further the rules of the House, in that their acceptance here would have given every Member an opportunity, a chance, to get fair consideration for those bills that appear on the Private and the Consent Calendars. It is possible that my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] contemplates that these additional changes will be considered by his Committee on Rules.

Mr. CRISP. I will say to my friend I hope sincerely the Rules Committee will consider them. I am not on the Rules Committee. Personally I favor the three rules the gentleman suggested to me after the gentleman's conference met, as to limiting debate on points of order and the right of the Library Committee to report favorably and one other which the gentleman suggested which I can not recall at this moment.

Mr. LUCE. Opportunity to debate and amend bills sent from the Senate by way of amendment striking out all after the enacting clause of our bill and substituting their own.

Mr. CRISP. Yes; I think that is a very important rule, and I hope the gentleman will go before the Rules Committee; and I will go before the Rules Committee with the gentleman and also express my approval of such changes; but they were not, from my viewpoint, fundamental. They are matters that do not involve any political right or the right of the House to control, and I thought there would be no objection to the Committee on Rules, both the Democrats and the Republicans, considering such changes.

Mr. LUCE. These three rules, Mr. Speaker, are typical of a group of changes that ought to be made to increase the efficiency of the House of Representatives.

When you are faced by the fact that at the conclusion of the last session 918 bills had passed one House and did not pass the other, you realize why the country is disappointed at our failure to do our work. If, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman had included in his proposal reform in the matter of the Consent and the Private Calendars, he would have conferred a great benefit on the Members of the House and on the whole country. We are united in those matters. The overwhelming desire of the House is that its business shall be expedited. We Republicans have set the example by proposing to do it now.

I remember very well eight years ago, when there was hope that something of this sort might be accomplished and the matter went before the Committee on Rules, we made no progress. We have waited eight years for the House to face the mass of legislation upon which we do not act.

If you want to change that thing, if gentlemen who are interested in the Private and Unanimous Consent Calendars want to pass them now and not wait for the inevitable delays, with the possibility of partisan animosity, the possibility of raising prejudice, then vote down the previous question that we may at once settle this matter. The Private and Unanimous Consent Calendars press upon us for action, they deserve immediate attention, and they ought not to be thrown into the political maelstrom that confronts us. For that reason it will be fair to the House to give us an opportunity to present the reasons why our proposals will expedite the business of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Under this permission, and in order that Members may have before them for study and discussion sundry changes in the rules that seem to me desirable, let me first set forth the situation.

In the House that adjourned March 4, 1931, there had been introduced 18,356 bills and resolutions, in the Senate 7,080, making a total of 25,436 in two years. Favorable reports had been made to the House on 2,734. Seven hundred and forty-seven of these died on the House calendars; that is, were not acted upon. Measures that passed the House and were not acted upon in the Senate numbered 537; those that passed the Senate and not the House 381, making a total of 918 that fell between the branches.

The measures that became law numbered 1,524, a figure to be reconciled with the previous figures by taking into account the instances where identical bills are introduced in both House and Senate, and one of them is laid aside.

It is also to be borne in mind that individual pension bills approved are combined in two or three big bills, which makes the showing not quite so bad as it appears on the face. This, however, does not alter the fact that more than one-quarter of the measures reported to the House were not acted upon at all, and that between 800 and 1,000 passed one branch and were not acted upon by the other.

Granted that some of these measures ought not to have been reported, and that there has been no loss because they were not enacted, yet it can not be denied that a lamentable amount of committee effort went for naught; that other time was spent in vain in House or Senate, and many, very many citizens were disappointed. Two-thirds of the measures lost were private bills, so that several hundred persons were denied the justice, equity, mercy, or generosity that committees had held to be deserved.

Two hundred and more were public bills. Many of them concerned administration, so that by reason of their failure the governmental agencies concerned will be by that much the less able to function as efficiently as committees had held to be desirable. Others were expected to inure to the safety of the public, to its protection, to its prosperity. Few, very few, concerned new policies—the things where public opinion might have divided between approval and blame.

This is not a novel situation. It repeats what has taken place at the end of every Congress in many years. Congress is getting further and further behind in its work. Like all other legislative bodies, it does not keep up with the times. Hence in no small part disrepute.

In point of numbers the minor measures are, of course, the most considerable. To handle them quickly, as, of course, the Members who have served here before well know, we have developed a system under which the private bills are grouped on one calendar and those to which little or no objection is expected are grouped on another, known as the Consent Calendar. Single objections have again and again prevented the majority floor leader from taking up the Private Calendar, and on those rare days when it is considered almost no bill to which any one Member objects ever gets a chance for debate and a vote.

When the Consent Calendar was devised one objector could block any bill it carried. This was found to put too much power in the hands of the single Member, and eight years ago we provided that when a bill had been thrown off and then put back, upon being reached the second time, three objections must appear. This one-and-three rule has in turn been found to give unreasonable power to a few, and I am sure the House would by an overwhelming vote, if it had the opportunity, to require more objectors. To that end the Republican conference agreed on a change that would require two objectors the first time, five the second.

For private bills the conference agreed there should be at least some chance of consideration regardless of solitary objection. The conference proposed that there should be two days a month for these bills. Each would be insured 20 minutes of debate, then going to the foot of the calendar if objected to by five Members; otherwise to be debated and voted on forthwith.

Sooner or later every man in the House will find it of advantage to his constituents and to himself if these changes in the calendar rules are made. I am confident the public interest would be subserved by them.

The conference also agreed upon two minor changes to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has given his approval. One would save time that everybody agrees is wasted in discussion of points of order. The publication of Hinds's Precedents took away most of the reason for such discussion, and since then the admirable work of the parliamentary clerks, Mr. CRISP and Mr. CANNON, now respected fellow Members, of Mr. Fess and Mr. Deschler, has so well established our system of parliamentary procedure that rarely is there real need of any discussion whatever. Yet the old practice of protracted discussion dies out but slowly and wastes many precious minutes. As a matter of fact, we might with safety follow the practice in the House of Commons, where for any member to question a decision of the speaker is a breach of order. Here, to be sure, our Speakers are elected as partisans, and a partisan ruling is conceivable still, but of late years absolute fairness has been the rule, and it is a rule from which no Speaker in our day is likely to deviate. However, it is at the moment proposed only to curtail discussions of points of order, not to prevent them.

Not to save time but to protect the House in its rights is the purpose of another change proposed. Once in a while the Senate will strike out all after the enacting clause of some bill we have sent over, usually a long, intricate bill, and substitute a measure of its own. When that comes back to us, it must be treated as one amendment, which precludes us from reading it for further amendment. In effect we have to swallow it whole. That is unfair and unwise. I have heard not a single objection to making it impossible.

There are other practicable changes that ought to be considered by the Committee on Rules, chiefly for the purpose of saving some of the dreadful waste of our time by lost motion in useless processes long outgrown and long discarded by the great legislative bodies of the world. Of them all far the most serious in its effect is the reading of bills orally and at length. The enactments of any one Congress comprise a total of nearly 1,000,000 words. A single reading of all such enactments of any one Congress, even though read as rapidly as the reading clerk can enunciate, occupies the clerk at least 70 hours, or something more than 12 working days, which is more than 2 weeks of the time of the House.

Taking into account matter that is read twice or three times, together with bills that fail of enactment, it is probable that nearly a month of the term of Congress is consumed in mere clerical enunciation.

As far as I can learn, this is not found in any other large legislative body in the world. The practice has been carried on because centuries ago in the British Parliament many of the members could neither read nor write. Now that printed copies are at command, the reason for the practice has wholly disappeared. I inquired of the clerk of the House of Commons in the Parliament at London when this practice was abandoned in Parliament, and he replied that such researches as he had been able to make threw no light on the subject. It was abandoned in the Massachusetts Legislature also so long ago that I can not ascertain the date of the abandonment.

If it were abandoned here we should have two weeks more in every Congress for the passage of minor bills now never reached, or for more adequate discussion of the big things. Gentlemen who are here in such numbers for the first time will find their greatest disappointment in the lack of opportunity to share in debating the great questions of principle and policy that confront us. This opportunity would be importantly enlarged if the House would save the minutes it now wastes in useless processes.

Take another, insignificant on any one day, but in the aggregate using up about four days of each term, the perfunctory and useless reading of the Journal. No harm whatever could come from dispensing with it unless on any given day objection were raised. Another change, apparently trivial in itself, would permit a committee to report a bill in a new draft or to combine report on several bills in such a draft. Now, when a committee has perfected a bill, it instructs its chairman to introduce a new bill, which, of course, entails no serious waste of time, though it may be important toward the end of the session. The waste comes from calling attention to each and every change that has been made, great or small. This invites ineffective discussion of minutiae, not only taking time, but also endangering decision on the merits. To put the emphasis on the well-considered opinion of the committee, rather than on the often immature views of the man who wrote the bill, in point of detail, is unfortunate. Here is another outgrown inheritance from centuries ago, abandoned by some at least of the most efficient and respected lawmaking bodies of the world.

The hour-rule for debate has also been made undesirable by changed conditions. In practice we let nobody speak more than half an hour, save by the unanimous consent always granted when possible to a man who has something to say and whom the House wants to hear. The harm in the rule under present conditions lies in the tendency of the man who gets control of an hour, to use every minute of the 60, doling out the time with slight regard to the need. To be sure, he usually does this because of requests, but these requests are hard to refuse and so two hours are likely to be used, one on each side, where one in all would amply suffice.

Another source of irritation is the man who in the course of five-minute debate asks unanimous consent to speak out of order, and when, say, an appropriation bill is being read for amendment, breaks in with five minutes on the iniquities of the Soviets. It is no great matter, but typical of the little changes that in the total would benefit our procedure.

Much more important would be some way to lessen the time taken by roll calls. The constitutional requirement of a quorum can be escaped. We escape it now whenever we are in committee of the whole, down at least to the number of 100. That avenue can be pursued further whenever the House is willing.

The immediate problem to which the most thought should be given is that presented by claims. Various remedies have been urged. Among them the Committee on Rules ought to be able to find something workable and fair. Nobody can deny that the way in which we now pretend to dispense the equity of the Nation does no credit to our intelligence or our honor. Both public duty and self-interest call for action.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate both sides of the House, the Democratic as well as the Republican, on the spirit of fairness that now prevails in this matter of revision of the rules.

Both sides now propose to adopt a discharge rule which is virtually the same as the one that some of us fought so strenuously for some years ago. We succeeded then in securing its adoption, but when we lost the balance of power it was again made innocuous, unworkable, useless.

As an illustration of conditions that prevailed in the last session, I may cite my own position as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I had before me bills authorizing the expenditure of between forty to fifty millions of dollars. The old Civil War soldiers and the widows were interested in this pension legislation. As the committee met subject to the call of the chairman, it would not have been a very difficult matter for me to have smothered this bill even if a majority of that committee and of the House had been favorable to the old soldiers' pension measure. Of course, I did no such thing. We reported out and passed a satisfactory bill unanimously. But the power I had as chairman was too large for one man to exercise. Only by revolutionary proceedings could any of those measures have reached the House from my committee without my consent. This discharge rule gives the power back to the House and to the committee.

The Democratic caucus adopted the suggestion of the able parliamentarian, Mr. CRISP, of Georgia; the Republican caucus adopted the proposal of the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. SNELL, the present minority leader. I shall vote for the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], for they are, in my mind, more liberal and more workable.

May I add, however, that I regard them only as so much more patchwork? They do not deal with the fundamental evil of our system—the concentration of power into the hands of a few. While the Senate rules concentrate all power in the individual Members of that body, so that they have to legislate by unanimous consent, in the House the power is concentrated in a few leaders, with corresponding loss of power to the individual Member. In this respect the rules of the House and the Senate are at the extreme of divergence.

In the Fifty-eighth Congress, more than 20 years ago, I made a speech on the subject, The President's Message and the Rules of the House. I had carefully prepared that speech by a study of everything that was printed on the rules of the House, and as a compendium I printed a concise study of the criticism of our system. I pointed out then the concentration and control of power in the person of the Speaker. After three years of constant agitation in Congress and before the country we succeeded in overthrowing so-called "Cannonism" by breaking up and distributing the Speaker's arbitrary power.

Gradually, however, it has been centered again in a few Members—in the Member elected Speaker, who is possessed of the power of recognition, which he retained; and extensively in the Member who becomes chairman of the Committee on Rules, through the control of the business of the Congress; and most extensively in the Members of a few great States, through the method of appointment of Members to committees. Both the Democratic and Republican practices, each being somewhat different, concentrate this vast power, this important and far-reaching power in virtually a handful of Members. It is very easy, therefore, for the majority floor leader, who is chairman of the committee on committees, acting with the chairman of the Committee on Rules and with the Speaker, to dominate legislation in the House. Under the triumvirate of rulers of the last Congress—Longworth, SNELL, and TILSON—this control was exercised in a seemingly gentle and mild way. It was a benevolent despotism. Nevertheless, there was lodged in these three Members the arbitrary power to control one branch of Congress, a condition well understood by the country at large.

May I sum up my views on this subject by saying that after 25 years of fighting for a revision of the rules of the House, having led in two such contests with some success, and after having gathered together and studied carefully the parliamentary systems of the State legislatures and of the parliaments of the world, I have come to the conclusion that our parliamentary procedure can be revised and perfected only by the appointment of a select committee composed of the best parliamentarians we have, acting under definite instructions, not only to revise and liberalize the rules themselves but also to codify, unify, and reconcile the decisions of presiding officers? Here we have confusion worse confounded. No Member can tell beforehand as to innumerable measures and amendments when a point of order is made what the decision of a chairman will be after hearing the parliamentarians discuss a point and review these past decisions. For this reason chiefly a careful study and working knowledge of our rules and these decisions is sadly neglected by the overwhelming membership of the House, and are only studied and debated by the very few who take an interest in the intricacies of our parliamentary procedure.

Obviously, the Committee on Rules itself will never revise the rules so as to remove this concentration of power, for the members of the Rules Committee know they have the power. They are not willing to give it up. Indeed, when I was a member of the Rules Committee I was asked by Members why I wanted to get rid of this power that I had as a member of this powerful committee. And history bears me out in my position, for the only thoroughgoing revision of the rules that was ever had by the House was by a special committee appointed for that purpose. This took place many years before I came to Congress. My distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is a very scholarly man, the author of notable books on, among other things, our American parliamentary system. He came before the Rules Committee to urge amendments when I was a member of it. I have had correspondence with him this summer on the subject. The conclusion that we have both reached is summed up in this brief letter from him:

WALTHAM, MASS., October 31, 1931.

Hon. JOHN M. NELSON,
Madison, Wis.

DEAR JOHN: When I sent you a copy of my United States Daily interview on the House rules last June, in your acknowledgment you said:

"The only way we can really revise the rules is to have a special committee appointed with that specific task assigned to it."

You are absolutely right.

The thing to do, then, is to try to get such a committee. In my judgment, you and your Wisconsin colleagues have that completely in your power. Without you, nothing can be done. With you all things are possible at this juncture. I want to help. To that end I have drawn the inclosed. What do you think of it?

Very truly yours,

ROBERT LUCE.

But, Mr. Speaker, as neither the Democratic caucus nor the Republican caucus has seen fit to make a thoroughgoing revision of the rules as a whole, but has reported this discharge rule and these minor changes, it is all we can get at this time. Patchwork as it is, it is an improvement, and I shall vote for it; but would most urgently suggest to whomsoever may be interested in this important subject hereafter that there will be no real revision of the rules as a whole until a special committee of experts has been appointed for that purpose.

Again I congratulate the House on the spirit of fairness and harmony that now prevails in taking this further step in the right direction toward restoring equality of representation, freedom of action, and greater efficiency to our parliamentary procedure.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, if there be one subject about which I am more densely ignorant than another it is the subject of parliamentary procedure. Nevertheless, I venture to discuss one feature of the proposed rule as suggested by the majority. Let me say, preliminarily, that I am in sympathy with the underlying purpose of both the proposed rules, to liberalize the rules of this House. In principle, I favor such a liberalization, but it is most important that in liberalizing the rules we should not destroy deliberate and orderly processes of government.

The proposed rule to discharge a committee invites us to enter upon a fateful experiment in the scant provision it makes for any reasonable debate on a motion to discharge a committee. No student of government can question that the parliamentary system could not possibly survive in this or any country without the committee system. I think the very greatest care should be taken so that in attempting to liberalize the rules we should not place the House in the position of Louis XV, who once said, "After me, the deluge." If we open the dike too far, there is manifest danger, especially in a critical time, when hard conditions are apt to make hard laws that much legislation may be forced upon the House which the House would afterwards greatly deplore.

However, the particular suggestion I want to commend to the majority side of the House, and especially to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], is as to that provision of the Democratic proposal which provides that on a motion to discharge a committee there shall be allowed only 20 minutes of debate. It seems to me this House can take no graver action than the discharge of a committee. A committee presumably has greater knowledge of the subject matter than the House can have, with the limited debate upon the floor that is permissible upon any measure whatever. If, therefore, on a motion to discharge, the only day in court of the committee, which may well have given months of attention to the matter, is 10 minutes to defend its right to proceed further with the consideration of the bill, you will have practically denied debate, at least any adequate debate, upon the proposition whether the committees of this House shall or shall not function. It is obvious that the moment the motion to discharge the committee prevails, in most instances the fate of the legislation will already have been foreshadowed, and the passage of the bill will follow the success of the motion to discharge. Therefore I propose for the careful consideration of the gentlemen in charge of the majority proposal—and I make this suggestion because with your intention to order the previous question we will have no opportunity on this side to offer amendments—whether it would not be fairer, before a committee is relieved of its primary responsibility to consider legislation, to allow at least an hour of debate, one-half for the committee to state its position and one-half for those who favor the discharge of the committee.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Does the gentleman yield for me to answer him?

Mr. BECK. Oh, no; because my time is nearly through.

Mr. CRISP. This is a drastic rule and will never be used where a committee is sincerely having hearings and considering legislation. Therefore, being a drastic rule which will be used only in extraordinary cases, because it can not be used until a standing committee has had a bill under consideration for 30 days, I think 10 minutes on a side is sufficient. If it is proven that this does not work well, then that is a matter which may be considered later, in respect to extending the time for debate.

Mr. BECK. If the committee is going to be put on trial for the fidelity with which it has discharged its duties to the House, then it ought to have a day in court, and 10 minutes in which to state its defense is no adequate day in court.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more.

Mr. BECK. Let me state a concrete case. Suppose the committee of which I was a member in the previous Congress, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, should have before it a measure for the consolidation of the railroads of the United States, and that after we had given careful consideration to it, 145 Members of the House were displeased with the progress we were making and determined to bring the matter before the House under this proposed rule. All that that committee, all that its chairman could say, would be what he could compress within 10 minutes. I say, far from promoting democracy, you are destroying democracy when you destroy the committee system. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate upon each side may be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended on each side for five minutes, to be controlled by himself and by the gentleman from Indiana. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I felicitate the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] that their long-deferred dreams of parliamentary equity are about to be realized in the first Democratic Congress that has convened since they have been Members of this body. I also congratulate my distinguished friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] upon the advanced and progressive position which he takes on the liberalization of the rules. It is to be regretted that these views were not expressed in the last Congress. For five Congresses—for 10 long years—every reform which he now so eloquently advocates could have been enacted any day the House was in session.

> When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
> When the devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

And I can also appreciate the conservative position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK]. We approach any proposition to amend the rules with reluctance. They constitute probably the most efficient system of procedure in use in any parliamentary body in the world. They are the heritage of more than 150 years. They are the composite product of the ablest minds America has produced. They have influenced the legislative program of every Congress. They will affect materially the legislative program of every future Congress. So effectively have they served the purpose for which they were formulated that in the revision of 1890, the most sweeping revision of modern times—after a century of experiment and practice—but four important changes were considered necessary. And in the revision of 1909, the most notable in the parliamentary history of the House, there were but three. It follows that we consider carefully and scrutinize minutely any proposal for modification, and only amendments of unmistakable merit may hope to receive even cursory consideration.

But no product of human ingenuity is perfect. The Constitution itself has been amended repeatedly. And the procedure of the House is no exception to the rule. From time to time, as the occasion required, the rules have been adjusted to conform to the changing needs of the times. For example, the revision of 1909 sought to remedy three major defects:

First, the tendency of a few powerful committees to monopolize the time of the House, crowding out bills reported by other committees.

Second. Arbitrary recognitions by the Speaker for motions to consider by unanimous consent or by motions for suspension of the rules, with the incidental denial to many measures of their only hope of consideration.

Third. The refusal of committees to report bills which the House desired to consider. The first of these was remedied by the adoption of the Calendar Wednesday rule; the second, by the establishment of the Unanimous Consent Calendar; and the third, by provision for a calendar of motions to discharge committees.

The first two amendments were successful from the beginning. Calendar Wednesday and Consent Monday are among the most popular institutions of the House. But the discharge rule, as drawn, failed to function. Notwithstanding repeated amendments no committee has ever been discharged under its provisions in the 20 years since its adoption. It is the last remaining problem in the procedure of the House, and the need of some practical method of discharging committees refusing to report meritorious legislation has been the storm center about which parliamentary battles have been waged in practically every adoption of the rules for the last two decades.

In the pending resolution we have the solution of the problem. Here at last is a workable rule. Here is a provision under which recalcitrant committees, whether standing committees or committees of conference, may be discharged, and the House afforded an opportunity for the discussion of measures it desires to consider. It is a provision which conforms to every requirement of the ideal rule. It permits the majority to legislate when it desires to legislate. And it safeguards the rights of the minority. These two qualifications constitute the highest test to which a rule may be subjected. The resolution merits the support of Members on both sides of the aisle. It removes the last obstacle to the complete democratization of the rules of the House.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, in 1923 I voted for the discharge rule calling for 150 signatures of Members to discharge a committee. I voted against the rule in 1925 that among other things increased the number of signatures required to 218. My record in favor of liberal rules is clear. I expect to vote for the liberal discharge rules to-day. However, there is one part of these rules proposed by our Democratic friends that I wish to call to their attention. I believe the Republican proposal is a better one in this regard as well as in other respects. The particular proposal to which I wish to call attention is this: The ordinary procedure for a bill is that, first, it be introduced. It then is sent to a committee and the committee holds hearings on that proposal. After the hearings are held and the committee has considered the bill, then the bill comes before the House, under the rules, for consideration. Now, we are here proposing a method different from that ordinarily followed. The proposed Republican rule provides that after 145 men have signed a petition to discharge a committee a period of 20 legislative days shall elapse before the matter can be called up on the floor of the House. In other words, after 145 Members of the House have indicated a desire to have immediate action upon a proposal, the committee in charge of that bill shall have 20 days within which they may hold hearings; within which they may hear those who are favorable to or opposed to the legislation; within which time they may gather information that the House will need in order to intelligently act upon the proposal. That 20 days' period, in my judgment, is absolutely necessary if we are to function with any reasonable amount of information properly gathered by the committees of the House.

The Democratic proposal, as I understand it, provides for a period of only seven days. In other words, you may have a situation where a committee like the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, or any of the larger committees of the House might not have had time to consider a bill, and a petition is filed and signed to discharge that committee. In seven days it is brought up on the floor of the House, and under the Democratic proposal the House would have absolutely no opportunity whatever to get information from the committee, or to have the committee get the essential facts about the bill. There are many things that could be discussed, but I think this is one which the membership of this House should decide, and to do that the Democratic motion of the previous question must be defeated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, on account of the demand for time on this side, which I did not apprehend, I am compelled to ask unanimous consent for an additional 10 minutes, to be applied to the other side also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that the time on each side be extended 10 minutes and controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I am not the father or even the foster father of any part of these proposed rules, and I claim no credit for them. I would not have taken the floor to-day except that I have been intensely amused by the sudden liberality and generosity of the now minority Republican side. It supports the liberality of giving away straw hats in December.

The elections of 1930 clearly indicated that there was grave doubt whether or not the Republicans would organize this House in the Seventy-second Congress. When you speak about a conference in February, you are speaking of February, 1931. When we adjourned a few days after that, on March 4, 1931, leaving the organization of the House in the hands of Divine Providence—and I say it respectfully—it looked as though things pointed to the fact that the Republicans could not possibly organize the House; but if you Republicans did, you would have to liberalize the rules. As proof of the fact that the Republicans never had a chance of organizing the House of Representatives in the Seventy-second Congress, I call your attention to the fact that five members of that delegation failed to vote yesterday for the Republican nominee.

I was a Member of the Sixty-eighth Congress, when the Republicans had a very slender majority. By sheer force we on the Democratic side, aided by some of the real patriotic Republicans actually pried out of the Republicans the 150-Member discharge rule. That was a galling pill for the old G. O. P. to swallow. As soon as the party "fit to rule" came back in power in the Sixty-ninth Congress, with a real working majority, the party of Hoover put back the 218-majority rule. [Applause.] Now they attempt to go out to the country and claim credit for this liberalization of the rules. Such insincerity!

Now, let us talk about this sudden liberality of the Republicans. I have heard a great deal of talk about the Private Calendar. Months before we adjourned in the last Congress I stood here on the floor of this House fighting for some change in the Private Calendar rule.

I contended that one man should not be able to hold up the business of this House. The membership of this House was almost unanimously with me in fighting for some change in that rule. A Republican Speaker presided over the House. There was a Republican chairman of the Rules Committee. Everybody sitting here listening to me had said, "Let us change the rules right now." I then took the floor and sought recognition from the Speaker to change the rules. I moved to change the Private Calendar rule by requiring at least three objections, but the Republican Speaker arbitrarily refused to recognize me for that purpose, and the Republican Rules Committee then refused to take up the matter at all. So the country ought to know that this last-minute conversion, colloquially speaking, is not "on the level." [Applause.]

I am concerned about one particular phase of this discharge rule, although I think the gentleman from Georgia has somewhat cleared it up. I refer to the discharge rule which provides that no measures "substantially the same" can be brought up twice. I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say, for instance, that if a measure providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment should not succeed, we could later bring up a proposal to amend the Volstead Act. However, prohibition is not the only important subject involved in the possibilities of this discharge rule. There are many other proposals involved. Perhaps some of them will come home to plague both sides of the Chamber. I am wondering, however, how the new Speaker will rule if, after a motion is made in reference to the submission of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and that is defeated, another motion is made to submit it to the States for control by the States, such as the plan devised by the gentleman from Rhode Island. Those, ladies and gentlemen, are going to become vexatious questions, which I had hoped would be cleared up before the difficulties arose, not only on the prohibition question, but on the other questions which may come before the House.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. If the gentleman will note the language of the Democratic proposal, he will find it does not relate simply to measures substantially the same, but the words used are "dealing with the same subject matter." That seems to me to limit the application of this discharge rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am not so sure. This question has been discussed by a number of Members of the House on this side, and questions have been raised as to just what we may face when those questions are presented for parliamentary decision. We may be going too fast. Let us trust that the intense desire of the new Democratic majority to liberalize the rules will work to the best advantage of our party and our country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the merits of these proposed rules, but I am going to call attention to the parliamentary situation which confronts us at this time. I might say for the benefit of the new Members that the phrase "gag rule" is a phrase that is euphonious in campaign times. You have heard much about the "gag rules" of Congress, and to-day you are operating under one of those rules. This is a case of where might makes right. The majority party has a few more votes than the minority party. The Democratic caucus and the Republican conference have given careful consideration to amendments to existing rules, but by reason of the fact that you have a few more votes we are denied the right to even offer amendments to what your caucus considers the proper rules to regulate the deliberations of this body.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not now.

Mr. CRISP. For a correction in the interest of fairness?

Mr. MICHENER. Not now. The gentleman will have his opportunity. I well appreciate that you are going to carry the previous question. You are generous to the extent that you are permitting the minority to even discuss the proposed rules, but the rule under which this matter is being considered makes it possible for the gentleman from North Carolina, who presented the resolution to cut off debate at any time, to prevent amendments being offered or considered, and to compel a vote for or against the Democratic proposals in toto.

There is little difference between the discharge rule framed by the Republican conference and the discharge rule proposed by the Democratic caucus. Either will work and will bring the proposed legislation before the House upon the application of 145 Members and by a vote of a majority of a quorum, the quorum being 218 votes. Personally, I prefer the rule as suggested by the minority, but I am sure that the Republicans can join in the passage of this liberalized rule. Even though we are not permitted to offer some helpful amendments, there are some changes, however, suggested in the minority draft that are fundamental, and I believe are of interest to more individual Members in the House than the discharge rule itself. I refer to a change in the Consent Calendar rule and a change in the Private Calendar rule. These changes have been fully explained by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], and the proposed changes are the result of careful consideration on the part of the Republican members of the Rules Committee of the Seventy-first Congress and the careful debate and consideration by the Republican conference; and, as a recommendation of almost a majority of the entire House, it seems that we are justified in beseeching the Democratic leadership which controls the votes to permit the House to express its view on whether or not these changes should be made. Favoring his discharge rule, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] argues that a majority of the House should at all times be permitted to express itself on all legislation, and it seems to me that it logically follows that this same House should in this particular instance be permitted to express itself on the kind of rules under which it will operate.

Under the rules which are here proposed it is within the power of one man, by objection, to delay legislation which has run the gantlet and is up for consideration in the House under the rules of the House, and it requires slightly more than the objection of one man to prevent consideration of legislation during the session. The Consent Calendar is important, and the Private Calendar is of utmost importance to those interested, and if there is a place where the rules need liberalizing it is in this connection. There has been more discussion over the Consent Calendar rule and the Private Calendar rule than all the other rules in the House put together, and I feel confident that if the amendments which we have suggested, and which we will offer if opportunity presents itself, will meet with the approval of the majority of the Members of this House. We who have served here some time realize that those Members who devote time to these two calendars are rendering a splendid service, yet it is not democratic to permit one or two individuals on their own initiative to assume to act as dictators when these calendars are being considered. After a committee has given careful consideration to a bill and reports it favorably, no single individual, who possibly has not even read the bill, should be permitted to prevent consideration.

Those familiar with the situation realize that rules are necessary to the orderly procedure in this body, and the more familiar one is with the proceedings here the more he is convinced of this fact. One of the prime purposes of the rules is to permit the party in power to carry out its program and at the same time to protect the minority, and on this occasion when we are trying to work out rules which are to govern us in our parliamentary deliberations in the future, it seems hardly necessary to invoke the previous-question rule and cut off the opportunity for amendment. This body is not going to vote for amendments it does not desire. We have plenty of time to-day, and it does seem that we are not unreasonable in asking that every individual in the body, regardless of the caucus or conference, be permitted to vote his personal views on this important matter. One of the new Members has just asked me what this previous question means. In answer I would say that it means that if the previous question carries, there can be no further debate on the amendments to the rules and there can be no amendments offered. In other words, the House will be required to take the rules as suggested by the Democratic caucus just as they are without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." In other words, it is a yes or no vote on the whole thing.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] will move the previous question, and those who are opposed to giving anyone an opportunity to offer amendments will vote "aye," and those who favor an opportunity of offering amendments will vote "no." We shall demand a roll call on this question, and I hope that the entire membership understands just what this vote means. It is not a vote on the passage of the rules, but is simply on the question of consideration of amendments; and I hope that all those opposing this procedure will vote "no."

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I would not trespass upon you further, but to assume responsibility for misleading, innocently, my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], when he made the statement that under the Republican discharge rule there was only to be a 10-minute debate on a side. I suggested that to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and I made the statement because I had had a printed copy of your rules that you considered in caucus, and it had 10 minutes on a side, and I did not know you had changed it. However, since that occurred I have seen in the RECORD that your discharge rule is one hour—30 minutes on the side—and I wanted to correct the statement and assume all responsibility for the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], which he made absolutely in good faith.

In response to what my friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] said with respect to demanding the previous question, this in no wise interferes with majority control of the House. I am a party man. The gentleman is a party man. When the House has the right to vote, a majority has the right to function; and if they order the previous question, it is majority rule. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it is amusing for me to hear these stand-pat Republicans clamor for a liberalization of the rules, now that the Democrats have come into power. [Laughter and applause.] My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] now demands that the proposed amendment give more time for debate. To him I will say that the people of this country are tired of hearing the speeches and the promises of the Republicans; what they desire is action; yes, relief legislation from the Democrats.

When I entered the House Uncle Joe Cannon was its Speaker. At that time the rules of the House gave him full power not only to appoint the committees but also complete power over what we like to point to with pride as the greatest legislative body in the world.

At that time the Speaker was the House; but in 1910, during the Sixty-first session of Congress, with the aid of the press and a few true progressives from Wisconsin, after a most determined fight, which was tantamount to a revolution of procedure, under the leadership of our then leader, Champ Clark; our present Speaker, JOHN N. GARNER; the present majority leader, HENRY T. RAINEY; Claude Kitchin; and Judge Shackleford, of Missouri, we succeeded in amending the rules and in freeing the membership from the tyrannical rule and dictatorship of the then Speaker.

To-day, after 22 years, thanks to the Democratic majority, we again have a chance and an opportunity to liberalize the rules and to relieve the membership from the extremely restrictive and established rulings which have been in effect the last 10 years of Republican rule.

To me, who continually demanded the liberalization of these rules, it is a great satisfaction that we are about to protect the Members in their rights and privileges so long denied them. For not only was the House often at the mercy of the Speaker but also at the mercy of the conferees and of the various chairmen of the committees.

If the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina will carry—and I know it will—the House can, yes, will, secure action and the Members the right to vote on any bill or resolution. No longer will it be possible for the chairman of the Rules Committee to walk about with pockets full of rules reported by the committee and refusing to call them up. Nor will it be possible for any chairman of any committee to willfully and deliberately refuse to call up a bill reported by that particular committee or to refuse to call a meeting, notwithstanding the fact that the majority of the members of that committee may desire to meet. Nor will the conferees deprive the House of the right to express itself on any proposition in disagreement.

Therefore I must repeat, it is amusing to me to hear some of you gentlemen demand a further liberalization of the rules.

As one who for nearly a quarter of a century has continually demanded such liberalization, I am in full accord with the rules which have been submitted, and I hope that every Member of this House who does believe in such liberalization and in complying with the wishes of the people of the country will vote for the rules as offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. [Applause.]

To the astute gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] I desire to say that, regardless of his able efforts, he will not succeed in deceiving the country in the belief that he and his reactionary colleagues, who for years had it in their power to liberalize the rules, are now being deprived of any opportunity to express not only their views but also to vote upon the amendment, since he must and does know that his side, now the minority, has the right to vote down the previous question, and, although defeated in that, can move to recommit the resolution, and in that way give to him and to every Member of the House the right to vote twice on the subject matter before same can be adopted. Therefore no one is deprived or abridged in his rights under the Democratic majority, as was the case when his, the Republican Party, was in power.

The adoption of this rule, being the first legislative act of this new Congress, clearly demonstrates that the Democrats are ready and desirous not only that the majority should rule but also that the rights of the minority should be protected; and, above all, that we all stand ready and willing to carry out the wishes of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 227, nays 193, not voting 12, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk.

(See Senate proceedings of this day for message of the President, page 22.)

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message just read be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Several gentlemen have requested me to find out the intended program for the remainder of the week. Can the gentleman give us that?

Mr. RAINEY. I can give the gentleman the program for to-morrow. After the reading of the President's Budget message it is my purpose to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the President's message just read. That will give an opportunity to all gentlemen who desire to make speeches to do so. I think of nothing else for the remainder of the week. The committees are not appointed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do we understand from the gentleman's statement that there will be nothing considered after to-morrow?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know of anything. We will make an announcement to-morrow. I can not think now of anything coming up for the rest of the week, certainly nothing of importance.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the Democratic Members of the House for a moment. Immediately after adjournment to-day there will be a caucus of the Democratic Party held in this Chamber, and it is requested that all of you remain here to participate in the proceedings of that caucus.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1931

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who are the light of the minds that know Thee, the life of the souls that love Thee, and the strength of the wills that serve Thee, enlighten our eyes that we may see the evils that encompass our days, inflame our courage that with the prophets' scorn of fear we may denounce what Thy light hath revealed. Draw us out of the easy paths of acquiescence, out of the chill shadows of distrust, and bring us to that highway called the way of holiness, where the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose, where the parched ground shall become a pool and the thirsty lands springs of water, where the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped, where the ransomed of the Lord shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

House Memorial 2 (by Mr. McKenzie, of Putnam) to the Congress of the United States requesting legislation for an appropriation for the relief of fruit and vegetable growers of Florida for losses incurred during the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fly

Whereas the State of Florida suffered irreparable damage as a result of the campaign waged for the eradication of the Mediterranean fly not only financially but in many other respects; and

Whereas because of the strict quarantine enforcement and the stringent rules adopted the growers of citrus fruits and vegetables and produce generally were unable to ship or to otherwise market their products; and

Whereas in many instances fruit and vegetables were ordered destroyed by order of the Federal agents at the expense of the growers; and

Whereas in many other instances fruit trees were destroyed at the behest of the aforesaid Federal agents and inspectors; and

Whereas it has heretofore been the policy of the Federal Government to reimburse, in part at least, owners of property for losses incurred in campaigns seeking to eradicate certain pests and diseases: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully urged and requested to act favorably upon proposed legislation for an appropriation sufficient to reimburse, in part at least, those growers of fruits and vegetables and other produce who directly suffered losses by destruction of property or otherwise by action of Federal inspectors or agents, in the fly-eradication campaign waged in Florida during the years of 1929 and 1930.

Resolved further, That a duly certified copy of this memorial be forwarded to the proper officials of the United States Government at Washington, D. [SEAL.] R. A. GRAY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FLETCHER also presented the following memorials of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Memorial 1

Whereas the great majority of the citizens of the United States either directly or indirectly pay taxes for the support of the Federal Government; and

Whereas citizens traveling upon Federal highways are greatly inconvenienced by being required to pay for the privilege of passing over toll bridges on Federal highways: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and hereby is, memorialized to pass the necessary legislation looking to the investigation and survey of the toll bridges on Federal highways throughout the United States with a view to making such toll bridges free; be it

Resolved further, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL and Representatives OWEN, DRANE, GREEN, and YON are hereby most earnestly requested to extend their efforts toward the accomplishment of the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of state of the State of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial under the great seal of the State to the President of the United States, to the United States Congress, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the governor May 15, 1931.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, R. A. Gray, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House Memorial No. 1 as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, regular session 1931, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 7th day of August, A. D. 1931.

Secretary of State.

Senate Memorial 17, to the Congress of the United States of America, asking that the actual survey of the cross-Florida canal route, to connect the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway with the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway, and the Gulf of Mexico with the Atlantic Ocean, be requested of the War Department by Congress, and authorized that said survey and selection of the most feasible route across the peninsula of Florida for a sea-level, or lock, combined barge and ship canal may be made at the earliest possible date, and construction proceed as soon as the State of Florida conveys the right of way and necessary land, free of cost to the United States, said canal being necessary as an aid to the development and expansion of the American merchant marine, and to extend the services of the Government barge line to the Atlantic States, and for the national defense

Whereas the construction by the Government of a sea-level, or lock, combined barge and ship canal across the peninsula of Florida is necessary as an aid to the development and expansion of the American merchant marine, and to extend the services of the Government Barge Line to all Atlantic Coast States, as well as to enable inland barges to carry balanced freight to the permanent benefit of more than 30 States; and ships in coastwise and foreign trade can save time, fuel, and insurance, by the use of such a canal connecting the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway with the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway; and

Whereas the Atlantic intracoastal waterway is now practically completed, and the Gulf intracoastal waterway is now open as far east as Mobile, Ala., and the Pensacola-Mobile Canal will be completed by the year 1933; and

Whereas it is important to the United States, as well as to Florida, that the actual field survey of the several routes mentioned in the river and harbor act approved July 3, 1930, be made without unnecessary delay, and that the most feasible route be determined by the engineers of the War Department and adopted; that said canal be completed in the shortest time possible, for the benefit of the United States, and as an aid to the development and expansion of the American merchant marine, and for the national defense: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Senators and Representatives from the State of Florida in the Congress of the United States of America be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested and urged to make every effort to have the survey and selection of the cross-Florida Canal made at the earliest possible date, and construction proceed as soon as the State of Florida has conveyed the right of way and necessary land, free of cost, to the United States.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Florida be requested to furnish to each of the Senators and Representatives aforesaid a copy of this memorial, and that he also send a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of War.

Approved by the governor May 23, 1931.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, R. A. Gray, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate Memorial No. 17, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, regular session 1931, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 7th day of August, A. D. 1931.

Secretary of State.

Mr. BINGHAM presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

This is to certify that hereto attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution 2 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1931, of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, the original of which is on file in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the Territory to be affixed.

Done at the capitol, in Honolulu, this 22d day of May, A. D. 1931.

[SEAL.] RAYMOND C. BROWN,
Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to refund to the Territory of Hawaii $200,000 advanced by said Territory toward the cost of the development of Nawiliwili Harbor, in the Territory of Hawaii

Whereas by the river and harbor act of March 2, 1919, the development of Nawiliwili Harbor, County of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii, was authorized by the Congress as a Federal project, provided that the county of Kauai or other agency would deposit to the credit of the Secretary of War in some bank in the Territory of Hawaii to be designated by him the sum of $200,000, said sum to be expended by the Secretary of War in the prosecution of said development work, which said sum was contributed by the Territory of Hawaii and spent for the construction of the breakwater at Nawiliwili; and

Whereas it has been the policy of the Federal Government, where harbor developments in the Territory of Hawaii are authorized by Congress, to construct all breakwaters and perform all the necessary dredging outside of the pierhead line with Federal funds, the Territory in turn to construct all terminal improvements and other necessary dredging inside of the pierhead line with Territorial funds; and

Whereas it was found after the construction of the Federal breakwater that the harbor was still unsafe and unsuitable for terminal development, causing the Territory of Hawaii, at an additional expense to the said Territory of $300,000, to construct a retaining wall or secondary breakwater in order properly to protect the wharf areas from the sea action; and

Whereas the Territory of Hawaii has at the present time expended or obligated out of Territorial funds for the development of Nawiliwili Harbor upward of three-quarters of a million dollars; and

Whereas the improved Nawiliwili Harbor is of tremendous value to the United States Navy, not only in time of emergency but also at the present time; and

Whereas the Territory of Hawaii has demonstrated its good faith in the Nawiliwili Harbor project and has advanced $200,000 for the construction of the Nawiliwili breakwater wall, a project essentially Federal in its nature, and has expended, in addition thereto, upward of half a million dollars on said harbor: Now, therefore

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby formally requested, through the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii, to appropriate and repay to the Territory of Hawaii the said sum of $200,000, heretofore advanced by the said Territory of Hawaii as hereinabove set forth.

Approved this 14th day of March, A. D. 1931.

LAWRENCE M. JUDD,
Governor of the Territory of Hawaii.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

[SEAL.] RAYMOND C. BROWN,
Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to amend subdivision (c) of section 13 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended by the act of Congress of June 13, 1930

Whereas by the act of Congress of June 13, 1930, amending subdivision (c) of section 13 of the immigration act of 1924 a preference is apparently given to the Chinese wives of United States citizens, married prior to the approval of said immigration act of 1924, over wives of other nationalities ineligible to citizenship; and

Whereas it is but fair and just that all such wives be placed upon an equal footing with respect to admission to the United States: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby requested to amend said subdivision (c) of section 13 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended by said act of Congress of June 13, 1930, by striking out the word "Chinese," appearing therein, and to that end the said Congress is hereby requested to adopt and pass that certain bill, being H. R. 13257, Seventy-first Congress, second session, entitled "A bill relative to the admission under the immigration laws of wives of American citizens."

Approved this 16th day of March, A. D. 1931.

LAWRENCE M. JUDD,
Governor of the Territory of Hawaii.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

This is to certify that hereto attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution No. 4 of the session laws of Hawaii, 1931, of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, the original of which is on file in this office.

Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, requested to amend section 534 of title 48 of the United States Code (sec. 69 of the Hawaiian organic act) relating to the appointment, powers, and duties of the secretary of the Territory of Hawaii, by adding, after the end of said section, the following provision:

"He may, with the approval of the governor, designate some other officer of the government of the Territory of Hawaii to act during his temporary absence from the Territory or during his illness. Such designation and approval shall be in writing and shall be filed in the office of the governor, and a copy thereof, certified by the governor, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior at Washington. Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to enact a law authorizing appropriations for the construction of a highway in the Hawaiian Islands

Whereas on September 27, 1921, and for a purely nominal consideration, the trustees under the will and of the estate of James Campbell, deceased, deeded to the United States sufficient land for a roadway from Honouliuli to Schofield Barracks, upon the understanding that construction of such road would commence as soon as possible, the Federal Government agreeing to keep said road open to the general use of the public; and

Whereas construction of said road has not to date been either started or provided for, although it is and has been urgently needed; and

Whereas there was introduced in the Seventy-first Congress of the United States by the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, a bill (H. R. 6792) the purpose of which was to authorize the appropriation of $363,000 for the construction of said highway between Schofield Barracks and Honouliuli, on the Island of Oahu, to be constructed under such conditions as should be determined by the Secretary of War; and

Whereas final consideration of said bill was prevented by the final adjournment and expiration of the Seventy-first Congress: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby formally requested to enact a law substantially identical with said H. R. 6792, Seventy-first Congress, authorizing the appropriation of said sum of $363,000 for the construction of said highway from Schofield Barracks to Honouliuli, on the Island of Oahu, to be constructed under such conditions as shall be determined by the Secretary of War.

Approved this 27th day of March, A. D. 1931.

Joint resolution requesting the Secretary of War of the United States of America to direct the completion of the Kaunakakai Harbor dredging project

Whereas the wharfage facilities and improvements at Kaunakakai Harbor, Molokai, can not be utilized to the fullest extent by reason of the insufficient depth of the channel approach thereto; and

Whereas it is highly desirable and will be of great convenience to shipping at said port to have such a channel dredged; and

Whereas the improvement program of the United States Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors contemplates the dredging of Kaunakakai Harbor at some indefinite future date: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Secretary of War of the United States of America is respectfully requested to direct the Chief of Engineers, in charge of river and harbor improvements, to undertake and complete the dredging of Kaunakakai Harbor, Molokai, as soon as practicable.

[SEAL.] RAYMOND C. BROWN,
Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States of America to provide financial assistance to the Territory of Hawaii for the segregation, care, maintenance, and treatment therein of persons afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with leprosy

Whereas ever since its inception the Territory of Hawaii has expended yearly large sums of money in the segregation, care, maintenance, and treatment of persons afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with leprosy and in efforts to eradicate said disease; and

Whereas by the act of Congress of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat. L. 1009), an appropriation was made by the United States for the establishment of a hospital station and laboratory of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service of the United States for the study of the methods of transmission, cause, and treatment of leprosy at Kalawao, Island of Molokai, in said Territory, for the purpose of assisting said Territory in the segregation, care, and treatment of leprous persons, and the eradication of said disease, such appropriation being upon condition that the Territory deed to the United States in perpetuity certain lands as a site for such hospital station and laboratory; and

Whereas, by proclamation of the governor of said Territory, dated June 28, 1905, the Territory, pursuant to the requirements of said act of Congress of March 3, 1905, transferred in perpetuity to the United States certain lands at said Kalawao containing an aggregate area of 640 acres, for use by the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service of the United States for the purposes stated in said act of Congress of March 3, 1905; and

Whereas said Public Health and Marine Hospital Service proceeded to erect buildings and improvements upon said lands for said purposes, but soon found it impracticable to maintain a separate institution thereat for the care and treatment of leprous persons and in some years abandoned the same, and said lands theretofore conveyed to the United States and all improvements thereon were finally, by quitclaim deed of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, pursuant to an act of Congress approved September 21, 1922 (42 Stat. L. 995), reconveyed to said Territory, to be administered at its own expense; and

Whereas said Territory has therefore borne the entire burden of segregating, treating, and caring for leprous persons in its jurisdiction up to the present time except for a station at Kalihi Receiving Hospital, at Honolulu, known as the United States Leprosy Investigation Station, administered by the United States Public Health Service; and

Whereas by the act of Congress of February 3, 1917 (39 Stats. L. 872), the United States Public Health Service was authorized to establish a Federal home for the care and treatment of all leprous persons in the United States who should present themselves for treatment thereat and of any leprous persons who might be consigned thereto by the proper health authorities of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to be treated and cared for at the expense of the United States; and

Whereas pursuant to said last-mentioned act a home for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy was established at Carville in the State of Louisiana and has ever since been maintained thereat by the United States Public Health Service at the expense of the United States and said United States Public Health Service has received and maintained and treated thereat leprous persons from various States and Territories, but has never been called upon by the Territory of Hawaii to receive, maintain, or treat thereat leprous patients from said Territory; and

Whereas the expense of segregating, treating, and caring for leprous persons has constituted and still constitutes a heavy burden upon the people and limited resources of the Territory of Hawaii so that said Territory has been and is unable to undertake the most effective and modern program possible for the treatment of such persons and the eradication of said disease; and

Whereas the Territory, by treating and caring for all leprous persons therein, has saved and is saving to the Government of the United States the expense of transporting to and treating and maintaining at said Carville all of said leprous persons, liability for which the Territory is authorized to transfer to said United States Government under the provisions of said act of Congress of February 3, 1917; and

Whereas said Territory is still desirous, in so far as its resources permit, to continue to segregate, treat, and care for its own citizens or residents afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with said disease, and to continue its efforts to eradicate said disease, but is in need of financial assistance in order adequately to do so: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, requested to provide for adequate financial assistance to the Territory of Hawaii by the United States Government to enable said Territory properly and adequately to continue to segregate, treat, and care for leprous persons therein and to continue its efforts to stamp out said disease; and to that end the said Congress is hereby requested to provide for the payment yearly to said Territory of a per diem for each person afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with leprosy treated and/or cared for by said Territory during such year equal to the per diem expended by the United States Public Health Service in the care and treatment of each patient at said home for the care and treatment of leprous persons at Carville aforesaid, and to enact into law a bill substantially in the form of that hereto attached and made a part hereof, entitled "A bill to provide Federal aid for the Territory of Hawaii in the segregation, care, maintenance, and treatment of persons afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with leprosy therein and in the eradication of said disease."

"A bill to provide Federal aid for the Territory of Hawaii in the segregation, care, maintenance, and treatment of persons afflicted, or suspected of being afflicted, with leprosy therein, and in the eradication of said disease

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, as soon as may be after the 1st day of July of each year commencing with and following the year 1932, pay to the treasurer of the Territory of Hawaii out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum of money equal to the average amount expended per patient per diem during the preceding fiscal year by the United States Public Health Service at Carville in the State of Louisiana in the care and treatment of leprous persons, multiplied by the product of (1) the average number per day of persons afflicted, or suspected of being afflicted, with leprosy treated and/or cared for in leprosariums and/or hospitals maintained by said Territory for such purposes during such preceding fiscal year, and (2) the number of days in such preceding fiscal year. All amounts so paid shall be deposited by the Territorial treasurer in a special fund and shall be expended in such manner as may be directed from time to time by the legislature of the Territory in the segregation, care, maintenance, and treatment of persons in said Territory afflicted, or suspected of being afflicted, with leprosy and/or for the construction, repair, maintenance, improvement, furnishing and/or equipping of leprosariums and/or hospitals and/or other facilities for the care, maintenance, and treatment of such persons.

"SEC. 2. The governor of said Territory shall, as soon as may be after the end of each fiscal year, submit to the Secretary of the Treasury a detailed statement showing the number of persons afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with leprosy treated and/or cared for during each day of such year in any leprosariums and/or hospitals maintained for such purposes by said Territory and the average number of such persons so treated and/or cared for per day during such year.

"The United States Public Health Service shall also submit to the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as may be after the end of each fiscal year, a statement showing in such detail as the Secretary of the Treasury may require the average amount per patient per diem expended at Carville in the care and treatment of leprous persons as aforesaid.

"The Secretary of the Treasury may also require the governor of said Territory and/or the United States Public Health Service to furnish such further pertinent information as he shall deem necessary for the purpose of determining the amounts payable to said Territory from time to time under this act.

"SEC. 3. This act shall take effect upon its approval."

This is to certify that hereto attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution No. 9 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1931, of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, the original of which is on file in this office.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the Territory of Hawaii to be affixed.

[SEAL.] RAYMOND C. BROWN,
Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to provide for the issuance, by the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor, of certificates of citizenship to all persons residing in the Territory of Hawaii who are citizens of the United States and who apply for such certificates and present due proof of such citizenship

Whereas, through the cooperation of the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor of the United States, provision has been made by said bureau for the issuance, to citizens of the United States in the Territory of Hawaii who are about to travel to continental United States and/or other portions of the world, of certificates of citizenship for the purpose of facilitating travel by such persons; and

Whereas such action on the part of said bureau has been and is greatly appreciated by the people of the Territory of Hawaii and has assisted and is assisting in alleviating the hardships heretofore imposed upon citizens of the Territory of Hawaii and of the United States, particularly those of oriental ancestry, in traveling to other portions of the United States and of the world; but

Whereas such certificates are not issued unless and until the applicants therefor contemplate traveling to other portions of the United States or the world within the near future and persons who do not so contemplate such travel are unable to secure such certificates, and there is danger, in the case of citizens not contemplating such travel, that the necessary proof of their birth in the Hawaiian Islands or other facts necessary to establish their citizenship in the United States will be lost by death or removal from the Territory of Hawaii of witnesses who can testify to such facts or otherwise; and

Whereas due to the large number of persons of oriental or Polynesian ancestry in the Hawaiian Islands born therein or otherwise entitled to citizenship in the United States and to the historical background of said islands, the conditions in said islands relating to the necessity for the certification of the citizenship of such persons are unique and require special treatment, due to their unusual character; and

Whereas the certification of the citizenship of such persons, upon due application and proof being made therefor, regardless of the presence or absence of intention on the part of such persons to travel in the immediate future, is a matter of vital importance to the young citizens, particularly those of oriental ancestry in the Territory of Hawaii, and if provided for will tend to produce greater security and satisfaction in such citizenship and will tend to create better and more loyal citizens of the United States; Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, urgently requested to provide, by appropriate and adequate legislation, for the certification of the citizenship of all persons residing in the Territory of Hawaii who are citizens of the United States and who apply for such certification to the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor of the United States and furnish due proof of such citizenship, regardless of the presence or absence of any intention on the part of such applicants to travel in the immediate future.

That duly authenticated copies of this joint resolution be transmitted to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Labor of the United States, and each of the two Houses of the Congress of the United States of America.

Approved this 22d day of April, A. D. 1931.

He also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to the election of Federal judges

Whereas all Federal judges are appointed for life and are subject to removal only through impeachment and for grave crimes and misdemeanors; and

Whereas the experience in this State has demonstrated that an elective judiciary with a limited term increases rather than weakens the prestige of the judiciary and increases the confidence which the people have in the courts without impairing the quality of the judges: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to submit an amendment to the Federal Constitution under which all judges will be elected by the people of the districts in which they serve for terms of 10 years; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. BLAINE also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide work and wages for the unemployed

Whereas it is human labor, both intellectual and physical, which mined all the gold, silver, metals, and coal; cleared the land for production; cultivated all the products; brought forth the evolution from the hut to the skyscraper; built all the machinery of the world; and provides all with food, shelter, and clothing; and

Whereas the labor conditions are so shaping themselves in the United States that private industries are no longer able to employ all the labor that is, and will be, displaced by machinery, and it will therefore become the duty of the United States Government to absorb all surplus labor, regardless of the causes of unemployment; and

Whereas neither the President of the United States or the governors of the several States nor the commissions or committees they have appointed can relieve the want and misery that prevails on account of unemployment; and

Whereas the demands on the banners of the unemployed for "work or wages" can not be satisfied unless the Government provides work and wages, which would bring a wave of business prosperity and would forever remove poverty caused by unemployment: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to promptly make provisions for the employment by the United States Government of all surplus labor; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of of this resolution be sent to United States Senators BLAINE and LA FOLLETTE and to each of the Congressmen from the State of Wisconsin.

President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
CHAS. B. PERRY,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. BLAINE also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a Federal old age pension law

Whereas approximately 6,000,000 persons in the United States are above 65 years of age, and at least 2,000,000 of this number are supported by public or private charity or by relatives; and

Whereas the great majority of these aged persons are people of sterling character and worth who have been reduced to dependency by misfortunes and the meagerness of the wages they received during the productive period of their life; and

Whereas no less than 38 foreign countries, including all large civilized countries except the United States, have enacted nationwide old age pension laws under which all aged persons are given pensions sufficient to support them without in any manner pauperizing them; and

Whereas in the absence of Federal legislation in this country a considerable number of States and counties have enacted old age pension laws to accord more humane treatment to aged dependents, but such laws are not only financially burdensome to the States and counties but do not meet the entire problem, which is nation-wide and should be dealt with through Federal legislation: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact a Federal old age pension law along the lines of the old age pension laws which have been passed by Wisconsin and other States; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Speaker of the Assembly.

Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
HENRY A. HUBER,

Mr. BLAINE also presented a resolution of the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring a proposed "prosperity bond issue" of $5,000,000,000, as proposed by William Randolph Hearst, for the relief of the economic and unemployment situation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented resolutions of the National Farm Loan Association and the Kiwanis Club, both of New Richmond, Wis., favoring a 3-year moratorium on mortgage indebtedness to members of the National Farm Loan Association, and amendment of the Federal farm loan law so as to permit sale of Government bonds to retire the present bonds and refinance Federal land banks, assuring the borrower a lower rate of interest, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented the petition of the Polish White Eagle Society, Group No. 704, of the Polish National Alliance of America, at Kenosha, Wis., praying for the immediate cash redemption of soldiers' compensation certificates, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the City and County Employees' Union, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the submitting by Congress to conventions of the several States, as provided for in the Constitution, of a resolution looking to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and also the liberalization and modification of the prohibition laws, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FEDERAL HOME-LOAN DISCOUNT BANKS

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to create Federal home loan discount banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes, and at the same time I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement from the President regarding the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 35) to create Federal home-loan discount banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement is as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

NOVEMBER 13, 1931.

I shall propose to Congress the establishment of a system of home-loan discount banks for four purposes:

1. For the present emergency purpose of relieving the financial strains upon sound building and loan associations, savings banks, deposit banks, and farm-loan banks that have been giving credit through the medium of small mortgage loans upon urban and farm properties used for homes. Thereby to relieve pressures upon home and farm owners.

2. To put the various types of institutions loaning on mortgage in a position to assist in the revival of home construction in many parts of the country and with its resultant increase in employment.

3. To safeguard against the repetition of such experiences in the future.

4. For the long-view purpose of strengthening such institutions in the promotion of home ownership, particularly through the financial strength thus made available to building and loan associations.

The immediate credit situation has for the time being in many parts of the country restricted severely the activities of building and loan associations, deposit banks including country banks and savings departments, and savings banks and farm loan companies in such a fashion that they are not only not able to extend credit through new mortgages to home and farm owners, but are only too often unable to renew mortgages or give consideration to those in difficulty, with resultant great hardships to borrowers and a definite depreciation of real-estate values in the areas where such pressures exist.

A considerable part of our unemployment is due to stagnation in residential construction. It is true there has been some overbuilding in certain localities in the boom years. But even in these localities the inevitable need is obscured by the tendency of the population to huddle temporarily due to unemployment. The real need steadily accumulates with increasing population and will become evident and insistent as we come out of the depression. The high importance of residential construction as a matter of employment is indicated by the fact that more than 200,000 individual homes are erected annually in normal times, which, with initial furnishing, contribute more than two billions to our construction and other industries. This construction has greatly diminished. Its revival would provide for employment in the most vital way. As a people we need at all times the encouragement of home ownership, and a large part of such action is only possible through an opportunity to obtain long-term loans payable in installments. It is urgently important, therefore, that we provide some method for bringing into continuing and steady action the great facilities of such of these great national and local loaning concerns as have been under pressure and should provide against such difficulties in the future.

The farm-mortgage situation presents many difficulties to which this plan would give aid.

I have consulted with representatives of the various groups granting credit on mortgage loans for the home and farm as well as Government officials and other economic agencies, and as a practical solution from the various needs and the various ideas advanced I propose the following general principles for the creation of an institution for such purpose:

(a) That there be established 12 home-loan discount banks (if necessary), one in each Federal reserve district, under the direction of a Federal home-loan board.

(b) The capital of these discount banks shall be initially of minimum of five to thirty million, as may be determined by the Federal board upon the basis of the aggregate of such mortgage loans and probable needs of the particular district.

(c) The proposed discount banks to make no initial or direct mortgages, but to loan only upon the obligations of the loaning institutions secured by the mortgage loans as collateral so as to assure and expand the functioning of such institutions.

(d) Building and loan associations, savings banks, deposit banks, farm-loan banks, etc., may become members of the system after they have satisfied the conditions of qualifications and eligibility that may be fixed by the Federal board.

(e) The mortgage loans eligible for collateral shall not exceed $15,000 each and shall be limited to urban and farm property used for home purposes.

(f) The maximum amount to be advanced against the mortgage collateral not to exceed more than 50 per cent of the unpaid balance on unamortized or short-term mortgage loans, and not more than 60 per cent of the unpaid balance of amortized long-term mortgages, and no advance to be made on mortgages in default. Such loans are to be made on the basis that there are sound appraisals of the property upon which such mortgages have been made. In other words, given sound appraisals there will be advanced in the case of short-term or unamortized loans 25 per cent of the appraisal, and in case of amortized long-term loans 30 per cent of the appraised value of the property.

(g) The discount banks, as their needs require from time to time, to issue bonds or short-term notes to investors to an amount not to exceed in the aggregate twelve times the capital of the issuing bank. The bonds of these discount banks would be thus secured by the obligations of the borrowing institutions, the mortgages deposited as collateral against such obligations and the capital of the discount banks. These bonds to be acceptable for security for Government and postal deposits. The result would be a bond of high grade as to quality and security.

(h) If the aggregate initial capital of the discount banks should in the beginning be fixed at $150,000,000, it would be possible for the 12 banks to finance approximately something over $1,800,000,000 of advance to the borrowing institutions, which could be further expanded by increase in their capital.

(i) It is proposed to find the initial capital stock for the discount banks in much the same way, in so far as is applicable, as the capital was found for the Federal reserve banks—that is, that an organization committee in each district should first offer the capital to the institutions which would participate in the service of the bank. And, as was provided in respect to the Federal reserve banks, if the initial capital is not wholly thus provided it should be subscribed by the Federal Government; and, further, somewhat as was provided in the case of the Federal land banks, other institutions using the facilities of the discount banks should be required to purchase from time to time from the Government some proportionate amount of its holdings of stock if there be any. In this manner any Government capital will gradually pass over to private ownership, as was the case in the Federal land banks.

The above details of the proposal are put forward as suggestions in order to give clarity to the central idea rather than as inflexible conclusions. The whole plan would necessarily be subject to the action of Congress, and many parts of it will no doubt need development.

There is no element of inflation in the plan, but simply a better organization of credit for these purposes.

This proposed institution does not in any way displace the National Credit Association, which occupies an entirely different field of action.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM C. GRAY

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that certain papers in the case of William C. Gray, covered by Senate bill 3562, of the Seventy-first Congress, be released from the files of the Senate so they may be returned back to Mr. Gray.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Was there an unfavorable report?

Mr. TYDINGS. There was not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

WICKERSHAM COMMISSION

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I have received a letter from one of the attachés of the Wickersham Commission setting forth certain facts in connection with the investigation made by that commission which did not reach the commission in time to be included in the report as printed under order of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the letter and accompanying statement may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter and statement are as follows:

FRAMINGHAM, MASS., September 18, 1931.

MY DEAR SENATOR MOSES: In November, 1929, we were asked by the National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement to undertake a study of the organization, personnel, and methods employed by the Federal Government in the enforcement of the national prohibition act. A report covering this assignment was completed in draft form in July, 1930, and a limited edition printed for the confidential use of the commissioners. Subsequent to the submission of this original draft an opportunity was afforded for a careful rechecking of all statistics developed in the course of this study. Minor errors were adjusted, and whereas at the time the original draft was completed it was possible to obtain only preliminary estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, it later became possible to use the official published statistics appearing in the annual departmental reports submitted to Congress at the opening of the third session.

These adjustments, corrections, and additional studies were before the commission when it prepared its Report on the Enforcement of the Prohibition Laws of the United States, issued January 7, 1931 (H. Doc. No. 722), and certain of these revised statistics were incorporated therein. Three of the additional studies were placed before the commission as formal supplemental statements, but the statistical addenda consisted of informal memoranda presented at various times during the commission's deliberations on the prohibition question, and this material was not presented in report form prior to the signing of House Document No. 722.

On February 26 the Senate ordered the printing of the data submitted by the commission in response to Senate Resolutions 423 and 463. Included in this data is the original draft of the report prepared by us, together with supplemental statements 1, 2, and 3. The additional statistical studies were not included because they were not formally "before the commission" when it made its report, and hence not technically within the terms of the Senate resolutions.

Since this material is to appear as a public document it is deemed important that the revised statistics available to the commission when it made its report, and partially incorporated therein, should also be made public through official channels.

We are, therefore, attaching hereto for the information of the Senate a full statement of the adjustments made in the course of the revision.

Very truly yours,

HENRY S. DENNISON.
ALBERT E. SAWYER.

It is important to add the word "wholesale" when referring to druggists in the second paragraph on this page. It is the wholesale druggists who were able to abuse the alcohol privilege for the reason that they were allowed to withdraw pure ethyl alcohol for manufacturing purposes.

(Page 203)

The caption Cereal Beverages was inadvertently omitted between the second and third paragraphs on this page. The matter in the third paragraph has no relation to the problem of sacramental wine, but is confined solely to the problem of cereal beverages.

PART II

The following insert replaces the tables appearing on pages 23, 24, 25, and 26.

(Pages 23, 24, 25, and 26)

A correct statement of the total number of persons appointed and separated from the service during the fiscal years is indicated. The personnel is divided into four principal groups, namely, enforcement, clerical, administrative, and legal. The classification in each case is made as of the date of appointment and does not take into consideration changes in the status of the individual occurring during incumbency. For this reason a computation derived from these figures showing total persons employed on June 30, 1930, does not necessarily conform to the classification of employees as of that date.

The figures set out in the table below exclude narcotics field force and clerks exclusively assigned to Narcotic Division:

Fiscal year	Enforcement		Clerical		Administrative		Legal
	In	Out	In	Out	In	Out	In	Out
1920	1,753	241	790	89	24	2	4
1921	1,321	1,461	445	265	17	13	3	1

From these figures may be derived the following computation:

The discussion of the Budget, which begins on page 41, our report, second volume, was based on preliminary information and estimates. The table on page 18 of the commission's report represents the result of subsequent corrections when the official 1930 figures were available. In the second paragraph, page 41, the statement that "Congress appropriated $2,400,000 to the Internal Revenue Bureau" should be corrected to read, "Congress appropriated $3,000,000 to the Internal Revenue Bureau."

In the same paragraph the statement that "Of these amounts the expenditures were as follows:

Internal Revenue	$2,339,781.10
Department of Justice	25,740.99

should be corrected to read:

"Internal Revenue	$2,939,781.10

Insert after the second paragraph on this page the following additional comments:

"Before taking up the analysis of the present force of the Bureau of Prohibition it is well to note certain facts regarding the effect of the act of March 3, 1927, upon the force transferred under its terms. The act became effective on April 1, 1927, and on that date the bureau consisted of about 4,000 employees (storekeeper-gaugers and narcotics force excluded). Thirteen hundred employees were already under civil service in clerical positions. The act, therefore, affected about 2,700 employees and required them to qualify under civil service laws or leave the service on October 1, six months later.

"The great majority of positions in the new bureau were filled by competitive examinations, but a substantial number of administrative and professional jobs were filled by noncompetitive examinations. Nine hundred and ninety-one, or 37 per cent of the 2,700 persons in service April 1, 1927, eventually secured a civil-service status, either by competitive or noncompetitive examination. Of this number 133 failed the first competitive examination but succeeded in the second or by virtue of an appeal. The 1,700 persons who were unsuccessful in securing a civil-service status by any of these means remained in service until replaced by those regularly appointed from the civil-service register. A substantial number of this group remained in service until late in the fiscal year 1929. On April 30, 1930, 81 temporary ineligibles remained on the rolls.

"Of the 2,700 in service and affected by the law on April 1, 1927, 858, or approximately 32 per cent, secured civil-service status as a result of competitive examination in the first examination; 133, or approximately 5 per cent, secured civil-service status as a result of the second competitive examination (December 15, 1928) or by appeal or noncompetitive examination. Of the 991 who thus eventually secured status 869 were in service April 30, 1930, and 745 remained on December 1, 1930.

"Of the 1,700 who failed on both examinations and did not succeed in an appeal or noncompetitive examination but 81 were in service April 30, 1930."

STATEMENT BY FORMER SENATOR FRANCE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short statement by former Senator Joseph Irwin France, entitled "Direct Road to Freedom."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIRECT ROAD TO FREEDOM

All true believers in self-government must now realize the failure of President Hoover's misnomered noble experiment on prohibition.

From the moral standpoint it has been demonstrated to be most highly immoral, breeding hypocrisy, lawlessness, and degeneracy.

From the economic standpoint it has proven most ruinous.

The moral, legal, and economic angles of this question all demonstrate the urgent necessity of the earliest possible cessation of this most ignoble experiment.

How can this best be accomplished? By the earliest possible repeal of the Volstead Act, with no other congressional-legislation substitute in place thereof.

Such action would leave the eighteenth amendment a dead letter, inoperative because infringements of same while illegal under the Constitution would not be criminal and could not be penalized.

At the next national election following the appeal of the Volstead Act a questionnaire should be submitted to the people direct in every congressional district, not to legislatures or conventions, whether they desired a continuation of the eighteenth amendment or its repeal.

By this plan only can a mandate direct from the people be ascertained.

In those States where the people's mandate favors the repeal of the eighteenth amendment action by the political machinery so wisely provided by our forefathers for the enactment or repeal of constitutional amendments would be tremendously accelerated, as undoubtedly legislatures in those States would feel in honor bound to carry out the mandate of the people to repeal and legislatures in those States voting against the repeal would similarly feel in honor bound to obey such a mandate.

The activity of the bootlegger and racketeer would immediately cease.

Every State in the Union would probably enact legislation prohibiting the return of the saloon but protecting the sanctity of the home and the right of the individual to enjoy the personal liberty guaranteed by our forefathers under the Constitution.

This, in my opinion, is the simplest and only direct method by which this most vexed question can be settled.

MASS PRODUCTION AND THE DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article by Mr. Eugene A. Cox, a distinguished lawyer of the State of Idaho, and a keen student of economics. The article is entitled "Mass Production and the Distribution of Wealth," and is based upon facts disclosed by the income-tax returns on file in the Treasury Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

The following definition of mass production is attributed to Mr. Henry Ford in the thirteenth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica:

"The term "mass production" is used to describe the modern method by which great quantities of a single standardized commodity are manufactured. As commonly employed, it is made to refer to the quantity produced, but its primary reference is to method. In several particulars the term is unsatisfactory. Mass production is not merely quantity production, for this may be had with none of the requisites of mass production. Nor is it merely machine production, which also may exist without any resemblance to mass production. Mass production is the focussing upon a manufacturing project of the principles of power, accuracy, economy, system, continuity, and speed. The interpretation of these principles, through studies of operation and machine development and their coordination, is the conspicuous task of management. And the normal result is a productive organization that delivers in quantities a useful commodity of standard material, workmanship, and design at minimum cost. The necessary, precedent condition of mass production is a capacity, latent or developed, of mass consumption, the ability to absorb large production. The two go together, and in the latter may be traced the reason for the former."

More briefly, mass production is the making of standardized products by methods which carefully calculate and coordinate all production factors to the ends of cheapness and speed. It is sustained by selling methods which calculate and capitalize all the factors which make people want to possess these standardized products and give up other satisfactions to obtain them. It is making things and selling things under ingeniously contrived pressures. Its operations are governed and directed by estimates of profit. Its success depends upon the maintenance of equilibrium between output and demand.

According to the consensus of opinion, that equilibrium is now upset and overproduction has resulted. Mr. Ford, however, denies the possibility of overproduction. He says that industry can never catch up with continually expanding human wants. But this statement ignores the fact that consumption is not measured by desire but by purchasing power; and industry can and does at times turn out more goods than people can buy.

Mr. J. A. Hobson, in Rationalization and Unemployment, explains the phenomenon of overproduction in substantially this fashion:

Industry develops fields of profitable production. Plants crowd into these fields, and the owners of industry, lured by profits and anticipating continuing markets, take too much of the income for dividends and for the improvement and expansion of plants in order to increase production and pay out too little income in wages in order to sustain consumption. Hence production outruns buying power and overproduction results. The condition thus proceeds out of a miscalculation on the part of capital in the application of income, and will recur at intervals as long as the profit motive remains without adequate check.

This domination by capital is an incident of machine industry. As machines replace men the contribution of capital to production becomes greater, and the contribution of labor becomes less. The progressive replacement of men by machines produces a constant surplus of labor. Sharpened competition for jobs results, and the maintenance of trade-unions strong enough for successful collective bargaining is well-nigh impossible. Highly organized capital dominates poorly organized labor.

Where industry functions behind high tariff walls the domestic market is monopolized through the organization of combinations, mergers, and trusts. Capital is then in position to levy toll upon consumers as well as upon labor. Unfair prices and inequitable wages combine to expand the gains of capital, and a tendency toward the centralization of wealth at the expense of laborers and consumers develops. Human nature being what it is, this tendency will remain inherent in the system so long as the profit motive governs and capital is in position to fix wages and prices.

The foregoing is a summary of some important tendencies of the present economic system as seen by some of the economists. It is assumed that there is a tendency toward the centralization of wealth, but this assumption is vigorously denied. If the existence of a tendency toward centralization can be proved, the view here outlined will be measurably confirmed. The issue is one of fact to be resolved by competent evidence.

The very mass and multiplicity of relevant evidence make the inquiry a herculean task. To examine the whole field is well-nigh impossible. But if there is a tendency toward centralization, that tendency should be reflected in incomes, and the Federal statistics of income, fortunately, provide a field where the evidence is relevant, authentic, and may be reduced to manageable proportions.

The verified returns of income present conditions for a large sample and cross section of the whole population. In examining these statistics it must be remembered that each year reflects in the main the condition of the preceding year. It must also be remembered that the laws governing the returns have been changed from time to time and that the statistics reflect these changes in the law as well as changes in economic conditions.

The changes in the law prevent the figures for some years from being exactly comparable with the figures of other years, but where the statistics disclose trends which originated before the laws were changed and continue after the laws were changed it must be assumed, in the absence of some other explanation, that these trends reflect changing economic conditions among the people.

For the purpose of this inquiry the most important changes in the law are the amendment effective January 1, 1924, raising the minimum for returns of married persons from $2,000 to $2,500, and the amendment effective January 1, 1925, by which the minimum for returns of unmarried persons was raised from $1,000 to $1,500 and for married persons from $2,500 to $3,500. By these changes large numbers of small returns were eliminated, and the aggregate income reported in the lower brackets was reduced. But the number of such small returns and the aggregate income reported in the lower brackets continued to decline after the law was changed. Hence the amendments do not account for a trend which continued steadily without regard to changes in the law. The changes in the law give the trend a sharp accentuation and present the appearance of a more rapid movement than actually occurred. But the trend is real and may be traced despite the changes in the law.

Having these things in mind let us inquire first what proportions of the people make income returns to the Federal Government. Bear in mind that we are dealing with the net income of individual citizens. We are not concerned with taxation, and we are assuming for the present that corporate earnings will ultimately appear in the incomes of individuals, and that a study of the incomes of the individual citizens will disclose the condition of the people who file income returns and furnish the basis for an inference as to the condition of all classes.

The following table shows the total number of individual returns filed for 1928 up to August 31, 1929, by people reporting incomes of $10,000 or less, and the percentage which this group bears to the whole population, the number of persons reporting incomes in excess of $10,000, and the percentage which this group bears to the total population, the number of persons not making any returns of income, and the percentage which this nonreporting group bears to the whole population:

Table I

Class	Number	Per cent
$10,000 or less	3,675,603	3.0
Over $10,000	375,366	.3
Not reporting (estimated)	116,000,000	96.7
Total	120,050,969	100.0

The table shows that for 1928, 3 per cent of the population, being 3,675,603 in number, reported incomes of $10,000 or less. About one-third of 1 per cent of the total population, being 375,366 in number, reported incomes in excess of $10,000. The balance of the people, numbering about 116,000,000, made no returns.

In the nonreporting group are most of the women and children, who even in prosperous times would not ordinarily be in receipt of individual incomes. But since there are about 60,000,000 adults in the United States and about 27,000,000 families, it is manifest that the nonreporting group also includes the overwhelming bulk of business, professional, and working people.

The next table covers the years 1921 to 1928, inclusive. In this table the returns are divided into three groups, those reporting incomes of $10,000 or less, those reporting incomes from $10,000 to $50,000, and those reporting incomes of over $50,000. The numbers in each group in each year are shown, and by tracing any one of the groups through the successive years it will appear whether that group is increasing or decreasing.

Table II

Year	Income class			Total
	Under $10,000	$10,000 to $50,000	Over $50,000
1921	6,489,817	161,290	11,069	6,662,176
1922	6,584,643	186,807	16,031	6,787,481
1923	7,471,760	209,927	16,634	7,698,321
1924	7,109,980	238,277	21,531	7,369,788
1925	3,844,033	296,500	30,518	4,171,051
1926	3,803,773	304,217	30,102	4,138,092
1927	3,755,850	312,202	33,695	4,101,547

Table II shows that the group reporting incomes of $10,000 or less has decreased nearly 50 per cent between 1921 and 1928; that the group reporting incomes of $10,000 to $50,000 has increased over 100 per cent; and that the group reporting incomes of more than $50,000 has increased nearly 300 per cent. The change in the group with incomes of $10,000 or less is affected by changes in the law, but this group continued to diminish during the years 1925 to 1928, when there were no changes in the law. The growth in the groups with incomes above $10,000 is not attributable to any change in the law, but reflects an economic situation.

In his report for 1928, the Secretary of the Treasury called attention to the startling increase from 1922 to 1927 in the groups with the larger incomes, saying:

"The rate of increase rises sharply for each higher income class. In the class from $50,000 to $100,000 the increase is 135 per cent; from $100,000 to $300,000, 279 per cent; and for $300,000 and over, 547 per cent.

"Similar results are shown for corporation returns, the rate of increase in the number of returns being greatest for the higher income classes. For the classes between $50,000 and $1,000,000 the increase ranges from 90 to 98 per cent. For returns showing net (corporate) income between $1,000,000 and $5,000,000 the increase was 92 per cent; and for $5,000,000 and over, 206 per cent. The total net income reported by individuals having net incomes of $5,000 and over increased during this period from $6,362,000,000 to $13,228,000,000; that is, 108 per cent; and for the several higher income classes the rate of increase (in income, not in number) ranges from 139 per cent to 651 per cent. For individuals with net incomes of $300,000 and over the net income increased from $154,000,000 reported on returns filed during 1922 to $1,153,000,000 on returns filed in 1927."

Had the Secretary spoken a year later, using the most recent statistics of the department, his statement would have been more startling. In 1927 individuals with net incomes of $300,000 and more numbered 1,988 and received, according to the figures just quoted, $1,153,000,000. In 1928 the same class numbered 3,187 individuals and received $2,385,651,000. This class increased in one year 55 per cent in numbers and 106 per cent in aggregate income.

The people who make up the bulk of the population work for a living. Wages, salaries, individual business, and partnerships furnish about 70 per cent of their income, as can be determined from the tables showing the sources of income by classes published by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Let us inquire how income from these sources has fared.

The next table shows what percentage of the total reported income in each year was received from earned income, that is, from wages, salaries, businesses, and partnerships of individuals. Changes in the law as well as changes in the condition of the people are reflected in this table, but a trend is apparent and can be traced despite the changes in the law.

	1922	1923	1924	1925	1926	1927	1928
	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent
Wages and salaries	55.05	46.04	46.04	38.55	39.27	38.98	36.01
Business	11.42	16.08	16.08	14.59	14.04	12.54	11.54
Partnership	5.74	6.12	6.12	7.23	6.81	6.70	6.81

Table III shows that in 1922 the specified items of earned income were 72 per cent of the total reported income and that in 1928 the same items were only 54 per cent of the total reported. In 1921 the items of earned income amounted to 75 per cent of the total reported income, so that Table III discloses a trend which had developed nine years ago and has continued in operation.

While the three items of earned income have been relatively declining let us now consider what has happened in the same interval to the principal items of unearned income. These principal items are profits from sales of stocks, bonds, and other capital assets and dividends from corporations.

Table IV

	1922	1923	1924	1925	1926	1927	1928
	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent	Per cent
Profits from sales of capital assets	3.98	3.99	5.12	11.61	9.35	11.05	16.80
Dividends	10.71	10.65	10.99	13.71	15.76	16.24	15.45
Total	14.69	14.65	16.11	25.32	25.11	27.29	32.25

Tables III and IV considered together disclose that from 1922 to 1928 the items of earned income as compared with the total income decreased about 25 per cent, and in the same interval the items of unearned income increased relatively over 100 per cent. In the division of the unearned income between the two groups those with incomes of $10,000 or less received about 20 per cent and the group with incomes over $10,000 received about 80 per cent, as can be determined from the tables showing the sources of income by classes published by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Tables III and IV taken together disclose that the kind of income ordinarily received by people with small incomes has been relatively decreasing and that the kind of income from which people with large incomes benefit has been relatively increasing. Both tables are affected by changes in the law, but the trends develop and continue regardless of these changes. The next table shows how the total reported income has been divided between the larger and the smaller groups, how much money each group has received in each year, and what per cent of the total each group has received in each year from 1921 to 1928.

Table V

Incomes of $10,000 or less			Incomes of over $10,000
Amount received	Per cent	Year	Amount received	Per cent
$15,594,000,000	80	1921	$3,973,000,000	20
16,174,000,000	75	1922	5,162,000,000	25
18,811,000,000	75	1923	5,965,000,000	25
18,896,000,000	70	1924	6,760,000,000	30
12,580,000,000	58	1925	7,314,000,000	42
12,570,000,000	57	1926	9,388,000,000	43
12,200,000,000	54	1927	10,370,000,000	46
12,156,000,000	−50	1928	12,469,000,000	+50
Net loss over 1921 $3,438,000,000			Net gain over 1921 $8,496,000,000

In 1921 the aggregate net income reported by all individuals was $19,577,000,000. In 1928 such income was $24,625,000,000, a gain for the whole reporting group in the sum of $5,058,000,000. But in 1928 the group with incomes of $10,000 or less received $3,438,000,000 less than in 1921, and the group with incomes of more than $10,000 received $8,496,000,000 more than in 1921. The gain of the group with large incomes is approximately equal to the total gain in reported net income for all classes plus the total loss for the group with small incomes. In 1928, as the table shows, 0.3 of 1 per cent of the people received more than half the total reported income. This table is also affected by changes in the law but the trend can be traced despite these changes.

The returns of income do not reflect all of the gains of the groups with large incomes. This is due in part to the greater care and skill employed in making out the returns of large incomes, and in part to the fact that certain real gains are not counted as income under our system of taxation. Thus between the years 1922 and 1927 stock dividends aggregating $7,217,000,000 were declared by American corporations, and about 80 per cent of these dividends were received by the groups having incomes in excess of $10,000. Other gains not counted as income are secured through exchanges of stock upon consolidations and mergers and the conversion of corporate obligations into stock pursuant to options contained in such obligations. Such gains have probably exceeded the total of stock dividends.

INVESTIGATION OF BANK TRANSACTIONS IN FOREIGN BONDS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 19), as follows:

Resolved, That the Finance Committee of the Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to investigate the sale, flotation, and allocation by banks, banking institutions, corporations, or individuals of foreign bonds or securities in the United States; and particularly to investigate and ascertain—

(a) Whether or not any banks, banking institutions, corporations, or individuals engaged in the banking business in the United States have as representatives or fiscal agents of any foreign governments, or otherwise, sold, floated, or allocated in the United States securities, evidences of indebtedness, or bonds of any foreign government; and if so, at what prices such securities, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness have been sold or allocated and what sums, if any, have been received by the individual, corporation, or bank so selling or allocating as percentage, bonus, remuneration, or commission for such sale or allocation.

(b) The amount of foreign governmental securities, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness held by banks, corporations, or individuals doing a banking business in the United States, or by the Federal reserve banks or board, including those securities, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness issued not only by foreign governments but by foreign governmental subdivisions and banks of issue and foreign municipalities, together with the names of the owners or holders of such foreign securities, bonds or other evidences of indebtedness, the time and manner of acquisition, and the prices paid therefor.

(c) The amount of foreign securities or bonds or other evidences of indebtedness issued by foreign industrial associations or corporations owned or held by banks or corporations or individuals doing a banking business in the United States, together with the names of the holders thereof and the manner and circumstances of their acquisition.

(d) The terms and conditions upon which all of the said securities, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness have been acquired, and the amounts paid therefor by any of the said banks owning or holding them.

This investigation shall be made at the earliest possible moment, and the Finance Committee at the conclusion thereof shall report its findings to the Senate, the said report and said investigation to be the basis of any legislation deemed necessary relating to the said subject matter.

For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and empowered to hold hearings and to sit and act at such times and at such place or places as it may deem necessary; to employ clerical and other assistants; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, and the production of books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths and to take such testimony as the said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may deem necessary, and to do such other acts as the said committee or subcommittee may deem essential in the matter of the said investigation.

The said committee, or a subcommittee authorized by it, may employ stenographic services to report the said hearings, the cost of said stenographic services shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words.

The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or subcommittee, willfully makes default, or who having appeared refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation hereby authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. For obvious reasons and because the information is essential in legislation that soon will come before us, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if it were not against the law I would have no objection at all, but the law itself requires that this class of resolutions must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the law and the rule of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I quite understand that, but I have asked in the resolution no appropriation at all.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, so far as I could catch the text of the resolution I am not objecting to it. I do ask, however, that it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. WATSON. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the resolution is to go over until to-morrow and the objection is made requiring its presentation to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I would prefer, because of the limitations of time and the necessity for haste to make the investigation, that it go to the Committee to Audit and Control, with the understanding that it will be reported back to-morrow one way or the other.

Mr. WATSON. To which I have no objection.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The practice has been when there is submitted a resolution of this character, which must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to send it first to the committee that has jurisdiction of the subject matter, and if that committee recommends it, then it goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, because that committee has no power to go into the merits of such a resolution. That has been the practice we have been observing.

Mr. SMOOT. I will leave it to the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the practice both courses have been pursued, but it is the general practice to refer such a resolution first to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate unless a motion to the contrary is made. The Chair will therefore refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I inquire if that is essential when no money is appropriated from the contingent fund of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is essential, because the resolution makes a charge on the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not so made by the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a provision in the resolution for the employment of a stenographer at not to exceed 25 cents a hundred words.

Mr. JOHNSON. The resolution authorizes the employment of a stenographer; that is quite true; but I have no doubt that the committee has the power now to employ a stenographer. However, I do not care to quibble about the matter, and, if the Senator asks that the resolution go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I am willing that it shall go to that committee and have it reported back to-morrow.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator whether he has included in his resolution the purchases, if there be any—and I think there have been—by investment trusts. As I understand the resolution it is limited to bankers, and I was wondering if the Senator intended to include investment trusts. I think that he should, if he will pardon the suggestion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should be very glad to include investment trusts. I thought that I had made the resolution sufficiently broad to include everything, but perhaps the Senator is correct in his statement.

COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL CONTINGENT EXPENSES

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WATSON. The resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], which was read to the Senate a few moments ago, was referred by the Chair—and I think quite appropriately—to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Of course, the committee on committees on this side and the committee on committees on the other side have not reported the members of that committee. At the present time there are two Republican members and one Democratic member, there being a vacancy on each side. My inquiry is whether or not, the Senate being a continuing body, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate now in existence can take jurisdiction of that question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Paragraph 2 of Rule XXV provides as follows:

The said committees shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no disposition to delay action on the resolution of the Senator from California. I suggest to him, however, that it is not competent for the Senate to bind a committee to report immediately, or to-morrow, unless it adopts a resolution instructing the committee so to report. In other words, a tacit agreement on the part of the Senators who are present here to-day that the resolution should be reported to-morrow probably might result practically in effectuating such action; but, of course, the object of referring a resolution to a committee is to give the committee an opportunity to consider it. So I am going to suggest that the Democratic vacancy be filled—and I have in mind the Senator who is to be assigned to that committee from this side of the Chamber—by the appointment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is already a member of the committee. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] be assigned to the minority vacancy on the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not prepared, as the chairman of the Senate committee on committees, to make a similar request at this time on behalf of the majority; indeed, it does not touch the point at all. The question whether the committee can legally function under the rules is not bound up in the number of members on the committee, in my opinion.

I have no quarrel with the ruling the Chair made a moment ago with respect to the committee being a continuing one; but, Mr. President, the contingent fund is involved here, and the Senator from California is asking that certain sums be charged against that fund, namely, the cost of reporting a proposed hearing. I want to ask, Mr. President, can that be done unless this committee is organized in the Seventy-second Congress and before the usual resolution is adopted permitting the committee to make charges upon the contingent fund?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution, if agreed to, will authorize a charge by the committee as a continuing committee; and, under the rule adopted by the Senate at the last session, the committee is authorized to continue to perform its duties until its successors are appointed.

Mr. McNARY. I have great respect for the opinion of the Chair in matters of this kind, but recently I ran counter to that proposition. Some preliminary hearings were to be held before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; men from all over the country were in attendance; and it became a matter of importance for me to determine whether the expenses of any of these men could be paid and whether a stenographer or reporter could be employed. I took the matter up with Mr. Pace, the disbursing officer, and, after he conferred with the Senate legislative drafting counsel, I was informed that a charge on that fund could not be made until the Congress convened, the committee was reorganized, and a resolution was adopted by this body permitting a charge against the contingent fund. I mention that, Mr. President, lest the Senator from California may find himself embarrassed by only a partial decision.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest that the rules provide that this committee has jurisdiction and can act. It is not the committee that makes a charge against the contingent fund, but it is the action of the Senate after a resolution shall have been reported. The committee has authority to go into the subject and make a report to the Senate. Then, when the report is made, it is for the Senate to say whether the expense shall be incurred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the resolution as offered provides for payment, and therefore must be referred to the committee.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a proposal. Early in the session to-day an important resolution, submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. While the committee on committees is not able at this time to make its report, it has decided upon the chairman and membership of that committee, and selected the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] for the chairmanship. I ask unanimous consent at this time that the Senate may act upon the nomination of the Senator from Delaware to be chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LABOR, HOUSING, AND SANITARY CONDITIONS AT HOOVER DAM

Mr. ASHURST. I offer a resolution and ask, after it shall have been read, that it may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 22), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to make a complete investigation with respect to labor conditions prevailing in the construction of the Hoover Dam (Arizona-Nevada) with particular reference to the wage scale being paid to workmen on the project, and living conditions, housing conditions, working conditions, and sanitary conditions under which employees are working. The said committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-second Congress until the final report is submitted, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent to speak for two minutes on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Arizona will proceed.

Mr. ASHURST. The resolution which I have asked to have referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate provides that the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, or a subcommittee thereof, shall proceed to the Hoover Dam, formerly called the Boulder Dam, and there conduct an investigation respecting labor conditions, the housing conditions of labor, the wage scale, and the sanitary conditions in connection with the construction of the project.

There will be some opposition to the object of the resolution, though not in the Senate, but I believe the Senate of the United States, having committed itself to such an enormous enterprise, which is going to cost scores of millions of dollars, should make this investigation in order to ascertain if there be any abuses.

It is well known that every member of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation except myself was in favor of the construction of that project. I am willing to trust the membership of the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and shall be content with whomsoever shall be designated to serve on the subcommittee. I would be pleased to see the Senators from California and the Senators from Nevada serve on the committee to investigate labor conditions there, so much confidence have I in their intellectual integrity. I hope the Committee to Audit and Control will favorably report the resolution to the Senate at an early date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PREPARATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 1), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the preparation of the several appropriation bills the respective Committees and Subcommittees on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, authorized and requested to follow the procedure herein outlined:

1. Each regular appropriation bill shall be prepared to embrace and carry only essential and nonavoidable items.

2. All items for equipment, repairs, extensions, and new construction shall be placed in a separate and special bill to be known as an emergency relief bill.

3. Funds for the purpose of meeting the cost of such equipment, repairs, extensions, and new construction, as estimated for and as appropriated, shall be raised by a special issue and sale of bonds to be known as emergency relief bonds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, for the time being I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution lie upon the table; and at a more appropriate time I shall call for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will lie upon the table and be printed.

ANNA JARVIS

Mr. HULL submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives to Anna Jarvis, widow of Grant Jarvis, late an employee of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, one-half of said sum to be paid by the Senate and one-half by the House, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said Grant Jarvis shall be paid by the House.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROAD PROBLEMS

Mr. COUZENS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas many railroads are involved in grave financial difficulties and all the railroads have sought a 15 per cent increase in freight rates; and

Whereas there is a movement now in progress to reduce the wages of all railway employees, although it appears that approximately 500,000 normally necessary railway employees are now unemployed and many thousands of others have only part-time employment, and that the present earnings of a large percentage of the employed railway workers are less than the amount necessary for a decent livelihood; and

Whereas responsible representatives of the railroads have indicated that financial assistance of the Federal Government will be sought in order to maintain the operations of many railroads, and to avoid further impairment of transportation service and further deferment of necessary maintenance with the resulting increase of unemployment; and

Whereas an emergency exists requiring that a coordinated program be developed immediately to preserve continuous and efficient railroad transportation and to avoid the imposition of intolerable burdens upon either the necessary investment or the necessary labor required to maintain this essential public service; and

Whereas there is no single agency of the Government authorized to develop such a program, or charged with full responsibility for determining the extent to which Government aid can and should be extended to meet all the needs of the present emergency: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of the chairman, the ranking majority member, the ranking minority member, and the next ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, and the chairman, the ranking majority member, the ranking minority member, and the next ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives. The committee is authorized and directed to make a general investigation and study of all matters affecting the operations of common carriers by railroad subject to the interstate commerce act, with a particular view to determining to what extent the Federal Government can aid during the present emergency in preserving continuous and efficient transportation service by railroad, in alleviating the financial difficulties in which many such carriers are involved, in relieving the distress of the unemployed railroad workers, and in preventing further unemployment among such workers. The committee shall report to the Congress from time to time during the first session of the Seventy-second Congress the results of such investigation and study, together with its recommendations for necessary remedial legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the first session of the Seventy-second Congress; to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

PRINTING REVISED EDITION OF SENATE MANUAL

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I offer a resolution which I ask may be read and for which I shall ask immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 20), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, directed to prepare a revised edition of the Senate Rules and Manual for the use of the Seventy-second Congress, and that 2,500 additional copies be printed for the use of the committee, of which 300 copies shall be bound in full morocco and tagged as to contents.

Mr. MOSES. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 23), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by the act approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," vested in the Philippine Legislature, created by said act, general legislative power with respect to the Philippines, in order that by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers the people of the Philippines might become prepared to assume the responsibilities and enjoy the privileges of complete independence; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States in said act expressly declared that it was the purpose of the Government of the United States to withdraw its sovereignty from the Philippine Islands and to recognize the independence of the islands as soon as a stable government should have been established therein; and

Whereas in conformity with the provisions of said act a stable government, founded upon principles of political liberty and upon popular franchise, has been erected in the Philippine Islands and is exercising political powers therein, subject only to the authority vested in the Governor General of the Philippines and other officials appointed by the President of the United States, and certain supervisory powers exercised by the Secretary of War, and the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President enter into negotiations with the powers having territorial interests in the Pacific, or adjacent thereto, for the purpose of concluding a treaty or treaties whereby said powers agree to recognize the Philippine Islands as an independent state, and covenant to respect the political independence and territorial integrity of such Philippine state, when the same shall have been established and so declared by the United States.

PROPOSED RULE RELATIVE TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILLS

PROPOSED BROADCASTING OF SENATE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. HOWELL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 28), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

EMPLOYEES AND COMPENSATION AT NAVY YARDS

Mr. HOWELL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 30), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, requested to afford the following information:

1. What was the average daily number of civil employees on the pay roll, with the average daily pay and total annual pay for the last fiscal year, at the following navy yards: Portsmouth, N. H., Boston, Brooklyn, Norfolk, Philadelphia, Charleston, Mare Island, and Puget Sound? To include naval hospitals in or near yards?

2. What was the maintenance and improvement cost at each of the navy yards in question—that is, cost of water-front dredging, piers, sea walls, buildings, ways, grounds, etc.; in fact, all charges for improvements and maintenance and new shop machinery? To include naval hospitals in or near the navy yards in question.

3. Inasmuch as two navy yards are apparently sufficient to maintain the greater part of the United States Fleet (battleships, plane carriers, and large submarines) on the Pacific, could not the yards on the Atlantic coast be reduced from six to two without impairing the fleet upkeep? In the event of such a reduction, what two yards on the Atlantic coast does the Navy Department feel should be retained?

Mr. KEAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 31), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control and Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

It shall ascertain whether, in the organization of any corporation by said board, such corporation was advisable or necessary, and whether the operation of said Federal Farm Board under said act could or could not have been better performed if, instead of organizing an independent corporation to act as sale or purchasing agent or in any other capacity, the services of existing cooperative organizations could not have been more properly utilized.

EXEMPTION OF FARMERS' COOPERATIVE ORGANIZATIONS UNDER REVENUE ACTS

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 43), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas a large number of controversies have arisen between various farmers' cooperative organizations in different parts of the country with the officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue regarding the exemption features of the present revenue act as applied to farmers' cooperative organizations (sec. 231, par. 12, act of 1926, and a similar paragraph in the 1928 act); and

Whereas it is claimed by representatives of various farmers' cooperative organizations that the officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau are guilty of acts of intimidation against officers and employees of various farmers' cooperative organizations in that said officers and employees have been, through threats and otherwise, induced to sign affidavits and make statements concerning the financial operations of said cooperative organizations by which the said officers and employees have been frequently induced to pay taxes against such organizations when, as a matter of fact, no tax is or was due under the law; and

Whereas it is claimed on the part of the officials of farmers' cooperative organizations that the Internal Revenue Bureau is not fairly administering the tax-exemption feature of the laws which apply to such organizations but is compelling the officials of such organizations to pay taxes which have been illegally assessed; and

Whereas it is claimed by the officials of such cooperative organizations that instructions have been given these associations at variance with and contrary to the exemption features of the revenue acts governing the taxable status of farmers' cooperative organizations by which a large number of said cooperative organizations have been misled as to their legal rights and have not made claim to exemptions when, as a matter of fact, they were entitled to such exemption under the law: Therefore be it

Resolved—

(1) That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the entire question of the exemption of farmers' cooperative organizations under the various revenue acts and ascertain whether or not the officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau have been guilty of any unfair or illegal practices in regard to the exemption features of the revenue acts as they apply to farmers' cooperative organizations.

(2) That the committee ascertain specifically whether or not the officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau have been unjust or unfair in their attempt to enforce the said revenue acts as against such farmers' cooperative organizations.

(3) That the committee ascertain whether or not the intent and spirit of the revenue act has been fairly and judicially enforced in regard to the exemption features in said law applying to farmers' cooperative organizations.

(4) That the committee ascertain whether or not such farmers' cooperative organizations have received the full benefit of the exemptions for such organizations provided for in the law, and, if they have not received such benefit, has the same been brought about by any dereliction, inefficiency, or illegal acts of any of the officials of said bureau.

Said committee is hereby authorized, in the performance of its duties, to sit at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as it deems necessary or proper. It is specifically authorized to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœna or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, clerical, and other assistants; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words.

Said committee is hereby specifically authorized to act through any subcommittee authorized to be appointed by said committee or by the chairman thereof. The chairman of said committee or the chairman or any member of any subcommittee appointed hereunder may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpœnas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or who appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law.

The expenses of said investigation, not exceeding in the aggregate $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee.

The Surgeon General shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of such investigation, together with his recommendations.

ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 46), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas the President of the United States in his message to the Congress on December 2, 1930, among other things, recommended as follows: "I recommend that the Congress institute an inquiry into some aspects of the economic working of these laws," meaning the antitrust laws; and

Whereas the President again said in this same message, "I therefore suggest that an inquiry be directed especially to the effect of the workings of the antitrust laws in these particular fields to determine if these evils can be remedied without sacrifice of the fundamental purpose of these laws"; and

Whereas the conditions of depression and unemployment in the United States are generally believed to be in a considerable measure due to the combinations, mergers, chain organizations, interlocking directorates, holding companies, price or cost fixing associations, financial-foundation associations, and uniform controls of business, banking, manufacturing, and commercial corporations of almost every kind and description; and

Whereas it is desirable not only to carry out the President's recommendations but to have an investigation of the operation and enforcement of the antitrust laws generally; and

Whereas it is the opinion of many that very numerous organizations, price or cost fixing associations, combinations, mergers, chain organizations, interlocking directorates, holding companies, financial-foundation associations, and uniform controls are in violation of the Sherman antitrust laws and the Clayton antitrust laws: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any duly appointed subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to hold hearings and to investigate and report to the Senate at the earliest practicable moment—

First. Whether or not the "interpretation of the antitrust laws by the courts, the changes in business, especially in the economic effects upon these enterprises closely related to the use of the natural resources of the country" require a change in said antitrust laws.

Second. Whether or not the Sherman antitrust laws and the Clayton antitrust laws, and any other antitrust law on the Federal statute books are being violated, and if they are being violated to what extent is the Department of Justice prosecuting the same; whether or not they are prosecuting some violators and not prosecuting other violators; whether they are compromising or adjusting and making terms with some violators by consent court decrees, opinions, or otherwise; and if some violators are not being prosecuted by the department, why the same are not being prosecuted.

Third. Whether or not in any cases brought by the Government against alleged trusts orders or decrees have been agreed upon by the Department of Justice permitting such illegal combinations to continue when claimed to be used only for the purpose of creating credit protection; and the committee will return as full a list of such cases as possible and report all information concerning such cases in which said laws have been modified by consent decrees if such has been done.

Fourth. Whether or not the Department of Justice has rendered any opinion, written or verbal, expressed or implied, to any illegal price or cost fixing association, gentlemen's-agreement association, credit-protection association, or any other organization having similar purposes that the proposed acts of such associations would or would not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws; and the committee will report all the pertinent facts relative thereto.

Fifth. Whether or not there is now in existence any understanding or agreement between said associations, or any of them, and the Department of Justice relative to the enforcement by the said department, or partial enforcement by the said Department of Justice, of the antitrust laws of the United States.

Sixth. Whether or not the existence of any such combinations, mergers, chain organizations, interlocking directorates, price or cost fixing associations, financial-foundation associations, holding companies, chain banks, or uniform controls or combinations, if any such are found, have interfered with or are now interfering with or stifling free competition or are bringing about monopoly.

Seventh. The committee, after making such investigation and reporting its findings of fact and its conclusions, will make such recommendations as it may deem fit and proper looking to the repeal, in whole or in part, of said antitrust laws as recommended by the President or the retention of such laws or the strengthening of such laws, and especially as to the strict enforcement of such laws.

For the purpose of this resolution the said committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings in Washington or elsewhere in the United States, to sit and act at such times and places either while Congress is in session or at any recess thereof, to employ expert counsel, to employ other experts and clerical, stenographic, or other assistance; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents as the committee may deem necessary, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable, to the end that the fullest investigation, report, and recommendations may be had.

The cost of stenographic services in reporting such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words, the cost of expert counsel shall not be in excess of $25,000, and the cost of the entire inquiry shall not exceed the sum of $50,000, and shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers reported by the chairman.

change in terms, the sale of ships to combinations of shipping interests, if such sales have been made, and all other facts relating to the conduct of the board and of the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS, ETC.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 48), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas charges have been openly made in the Senate of improper sea mail contracts in Senate Document No. 210, Seventy-first Congress, entitled "The Truth About the Postal Contracts"; and

Whereas a reply has been made by the Shipping Board and still further charges have been made and published in the RECORD; and

Whereas charges have also been made in reference to postal air mail contracts; and

Whereas the use of mail tubes, especially from airports, has been a matter of consideration by the Senate; and

Whereas by action of the Postmaster General the Interstate Commerce Commission has before it a proposal to increase by $7,000,000 the parcel-post rates; and

Whereas under the post-office building program few buildings in the smaller towns are being erected: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any duly elected subcommittee thereof elected by the full committee, is hereby authorized to investigate during the present session of Congress or any recess thereof, to hold hearings at such times and places as such committee may deem proper, and investigate fully the questions:

1. Of all air mail contracts.

3. Of the use of mail tubes in cities, including the transmission of mail from airports to post offices.

The cost of stenographic services in reporting such hearings shall not exceed 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

DEALINGS OF FEDERAL FARM BOARD WITH COTTON SITUATION

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 49), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Whereas in hearings held before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate evidence was offered showing that the prices of farm products have constantly declined since the institution of the Farm Board; and

Whereas it developed in those hearings that the Farm Board was backing cooperative associations in cotton, which associations were not entirely responsible financially; that only four of them were responsible financially; and

Whereas it developed that the Farm Board had taken over through cotton stabilization corporations 1,300,000 bales of cotton which, in the opinion of all witnesses, constitutes a menace to the price of cotton in the particular way in which it is now being held; and

Whereas it was shown that the cost of handling cotton by the cooperative associations was as great or greater than it was under the former system of dealing with this product; and

Whereas it developed in said hearings that the cotton cooperative associations were using funds secured from the Government with which to buy cotton futures and to engage in speculation on the cotton market; and

Whereas it happens that an actual corner was created nearly a year ago in the cotton market, requiring several thousand bales of cotton which had already been shipped abroad to be returned to America to meet such speculative situation; and

Whereas it is admitted on all sides that the Federal Government already has a loss in the dealings of the Farm Board on the cotton market of something like $45,000,000: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Vice President shall, and he is hereby authorized to, name a committee of five Senators, which committee shall investigate the subject of the Farm Board's dealings with the entire cotton situation, such committee being hereby authorized and empowered to sit in recess at such times and places as it may fix and report its findings to the present session of Congress.

PAULINE L. WATTS

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 57), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1932, to Pauline L. Watts, widow of William Watts, late elevator operator in the Senate Office Building, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate at which such William Watts was receiving compensation by law at the time of his death, such sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other expenses.

THE BUDGET

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I have the honor to transmit herewith the Budget of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. The receipts and expenditures shown in detail in the Budget are summarized in the following statement:

Summary of receipts and expenditures (exclusive of postal revenues and postal expenditures paid from postal revenues)

	1933	1932	1931
General fund receipts	$2,473,515,772.00	$2,204,257,200.00	$3,103,336,105.16
Special fund receipts	103,014,430.00	34,621,600.00	86,303,975.14
Total, general and special fund receipts	2,576,530,202.00	2,238,878,800.00	3,189,640,080.30
General fund expenditures	3,889,223,050.00	4,284,411,800.00	3,987,148,133.52
Special fund expenditures	107,449,400.00	77,428,000.00	104,515,774.89
Total, general and special fund expenditures	3,996,672,450.00	4,361,839,800.00	4,091,663,908.41
Excess of general and special fund expenditures over general and special fund receipts	1,420,142,248.00	2,122,961,00 (0	902,023,828.11
Excess of trust fund receipts over trust fund expenditures	3,192,800.00	277.31 (0
Excess of trust fund expenditures over trust fund receipts			693,016.96
Total, excess of expenditures	1,416,949,448.00	2,122,683,685.00	902,716,845.07

From this statement it will be seen that, in spite of an estimated increase of over $337,000,000 in receipts for next year and an estimated reduction in expenditures of more than $365,000,000, a large excess of expenditures is still indicated for the fiscal year 1933 under present laws. This condition requires that I make, in accordance with section 202 of the Budget and accounting act, recommendations to Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the estimated deficiency. My recommendations appear later in this message.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, the receipts, originally estimated at $3,956,000,000, are now expected to fall of realization because of the severity of the depression and will fall below the estimates by $1,717,000,000. The principal elements entering into this decline in revenues are income-tax receipts, $1,140,000,000; customs receipts, $202,000,000; miscellaneous internal-revenue receipts, $132,000,000; and postponement of payments of principal and interest on the foreign debt, $247,000,000.

Expenditures are expected to increase over the original estimates by $437,000,000. This is the net difference between many items of increase and decrease. The principal increases, in part due to subsequent legislation, include added benefits to veterans, $135,000,000; speeding up of public works to aid unemployment, $160,000,000; Federal Farm Board revolving loan fund, $80,000,000; interest on the public debt, $24,000,000; postal deficit, $81,000,000; and settlements under the war claims act, $37,000,000. There are many other individual items of increase over the expenditures estimated a year ago which would materially swell the total of increases. Rigid reduction of expenses elsewhere supplemented by decreases in public-debt expenditures on account of the moratorium and smaller tax refunds than were originally estimated serve to offset the total increases. These changes in receipts and expenditures indicate a deficit of $2,123,000,000 which includes statutory debt retirement or a probable net debt increase of $1,711,000,000.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, the actual receipts fell short of those estimated a year ago by $516,000,000. The principal elements in this falling off were internal revenue and customs receipts which, together, account for $506,000,000. The actual expenditures exceeded those estimated for the year by $207,000,000, and may be attributed to the special legislation calling for emergency drought relief and increased public works to relieve unemployment, coupled with the advance payment of $112,000,000 to the adjusted-service certificate fund, offset in part by reductions and economies in other directions. The net result was a deficit of $902,000,000, which included $440,000,000 for statutory debt retirement, or a net increase in the debt of $462,000,000, plus additional cash in the Treasury of $153,000,000, or a total debt increase of $615,000,000.

TAXES

We are now face to face with a situation where for a time the current revenues of the Government under our existing laws have fallen below the amounts required to meet the absolutely necessary expenses. This brings the question directly before us of the course that shall be pursued. As already stated the deficit for the fiscal year 1931 is $902,000,000 and the estimated deficits for 1932, $2,123,000,000, and 1933, $1,417,000,000, or a total of $4,442,000,000, which, after deducting statutory debt redemptions and increased cash in the Treasury, show for these three fiscal years a total probable net increase in the national debt of $3,247,000,000. Rightly or wrongly, our tax system is very largely based upon business profits and in consequence is subject to great variables.

We can not maintain public confidence nor stability of the Federal Government without undertaking some temporary tax increases. It is obviously impossible to impose a degree of taxation which will balance the Budget for the current fiscal year. We should endeavor by increase of taxes and rigid curtailment of expenditures to balance the Budget for the next fiscal year except to the extent of the amount required for statutory debt retirements. We should assure its balance, including statutory debt retirements, for the fiscal year following.

I recommend that Congress provide for an increase in taxation for a definite limited period and upon the general plan of taxation which existed under the revenue act of 1924 with such changes as may be appropriate in the light of altered conditions. The Secretary of the Treasury has prepared recommendations along these lines which he will present at the proper time. It is proposed that this increase shall be definitely terminated in two years from next July. This plan, it is estimated, will realize $920,000,000 next year and thus meet the above conditions of balancing the Budget for the fiscal year 1933 except for the statutory debt retirement. It would balance the Budget including debt retirement in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1933. It would provide about $390,000,000 for the current year, leaving us with the necessity of borrowing an amount which will represent a net increase in the public debt by about $1,320,000,000.

The plan of approximately reenacting the revenue act of 1924 has the great advantage that the Government is equipped by experience with similar legislation for its systematic and economical collection. The public has paid such taxes in the past and has found them not intolerable and has found that they do not prevent increased prosperity. By providing a definite date for termination of the temporary increase it will allow taxpayers to look forward to definite relief.

I further recommend that Congress inquire into the economic effect of the provisions of the present law relating to capital gains and losses.

The bare comparison between appropriations proposed for the next fiscal year and those made for the current fiscal year, as shown in the above statement, fails to present a true picture of Government operations to the extent that in neither year do these appropriations represent the full amount available for expenditure, due largely to continuing appropriations from previous years. It is necessary to consider total expenditures in order to arrive at a true comparison between the two years. That comparison is given in the opening paragraph of this message and shows that the expenditures for 1933 are estimated at $365,000,000 less than those for the current fiscal year.

In framing this Budget I have proceeded on the basis that the estimates for 1933 should ask for only the minimum amounts which are absolutely essential for the operation of the Government under existing law, after making due allowance for continuing appropriations. The appropriation estimates for 1933 reflect a drastic curtailment of the expenses of Federal activities in all directions where a consideration of the public welfare would permit it. Even with such reductions in the estimates of appropriations the anticipated receipts under existing law, as stated above, will be $1,417,000,000 short of the amount needed to meet Federal expenditures, including statutory debt retirement.

In viewing our financial requirements for 1933 the fact should not be overlooked that of the total of $3,942,000,000 of the estimates of appropriations payable from the Treasury contained in this Budget, $1,285,000,000 is represented by permanent definite and indefinite appropriations which by law are automatically made each year without further action by the Congress. Taking into consideration that in addition to this sum of $1,285,000,000 of permanent definite and indefinite appropriations there are other expenditures of the nature of fixed charges amounting to approximately $1,000,000,000 for which annual estimates of appropriations must be submitted, there is in reality an area of only about $1,700,000,000 of the total of $3,942,000,000 presented in this Budget which is available for consideration in seeking means to curtail our expenditures.

SHIPPING BOARD

The estimates for the Shipping Board for 1933 show a decrease from the appropriations for 1932 of $36,972,000. This is due mainly to the fact that no further appropriation is needed at this time for the construction loan fund for which $35,000,000 was appropriated in 1932, it being contemplated that the unexpended balance of that appropriation, together with repayments of loans and sales receipts transferred to the fund, will be sufficient to meet expenditures from the fund during 1933. For the shipping fund for which $1,970,000 was appropriated in 1932, no estimate for a further appropriation is being presented, as it is expected that the operating loss for 1933, which is estimated at about $5,250,000, can be met by utilizing cash balances and reserves.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

There is requested in this Budget a total of slightly more than $1,072,000,000 for the Veterans' Administration, compared with a total appropriation for 1932 of approximately $947,000,000. About $21,000,000 of each of these amounts pertains to the civil service retirement and disability fund and is not properly chargeable to the annual cost of caring for our veterans, which thus becomes $926,000,000 for 1932 and $1,051,000,000 for 1933. Comparison of these amounts indicates on its face a net increase of $125,000,000 for 1933. However, it is now known that additional appropriations will be required for the fiscal year 1932 to the approximate amount of $260,000,000, of which $200,000,000 is to meet obligations due to the increase in the loan value of adjusted-service certificates and $60,000,000 to meet the requirements for military and naval compensation, Army and Navy pensions, and aid to State and Territorial homes for disabled veterans.

Taking these supplemental requirements for 1932 into consideration, the above indicated net increase of $125,000,000 becomes a net decrease of approximately $135,000,000. This net decrease, however, is due largely to the adjusted-service certificate fund requirements, which are $162,000,000 less for 1933. If the adjusted-service certificate fund be excluded from both 1932 and 1933, the estimates for 1933 represent an ultimate net increase over 1932 of $27,000,000. This amount is the net difference between several items of increase and decrease. The principal item of increase is found in military and naval compensation, which is up $42,000,000. Resulting from the increase in hospital and domiciliary facilities, the cost of administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services shows an increase of $4,460,000, and there is a further increase of $1,527,000 in the item for hospital and domiciliary facilities. Offsetting these increases is a decrease of $9,000,000 in Army and Navy pensions, $4,500,000 in military and naval insurance, and $7,762,000 in the Government life-insurance fund.

AGRICULTURE

The estimates for the Department of Agriculture for 1933 carry approximately $49,800,000 less than the appropriations for 1932. This decrease is accounted for in part by the fact that the 1932 appropriations contained $22,000,000 for seed loans and agricultural relief for which no estimate is required for 1933. There is a further reduction of $20,000,000 in the 1933 estimates from the 1932 appropriations for Federal-aid roads and forest roads and trails, as the regular programs for these works under existing authorizations were advanced to that extent in 1931 and 1932 by the funds made available in the emergency construction appropriations. The balance of the decrease is reflected in a reduction of $1,750,000 in the estimate for the acquisition of additional forest lands and $4,800,000 for other activities of the department.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The estimates for practically all of the organization units in the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1933 are less than the appropriations for 1932, the notable exception being an increase of $57,400,000 in the items for the construction of new Federal buildings authorized and now in some stage of development and for the operation and maintenance of completed buildings. The principal items of decrease are $26,000,000 for refunding internal-revenue taxes illegally collected, funds now available for this purpose being considered sufficient for the fiscal year 1933; $3,200,000 for the Coast Guard, due principally to the completion of its programs for the construction of buildings and vessels; $934,000 for customs administration, as a result of falling receipts; and $512,000 for the Public Health Service, due principally to nonrecurring expenditures for equipping new hospitals and quarantine stations.

The prospective operations under permanent indefinite appropriation items in the fiscal year 1933 will be largely in excess of the current year. To provide for interest on our enlarged public debt, $35,000,000 additional will be required. Public-debt retirements required to be made from ordinary receipts will require $85,000,000 additional for the purposes of the cumulative sinking fund, receipts from foreign governments to be applied to debt retirements, and retirements from franchise-tax receipts from Federal reserve banks.

The Federal public building program authorized by the act of May 25, 1926, as amended, is being advanced in a marked degree in furtherance of the movement for the relief of the unemployed. The total authorizations now amount to $620,000,000 in addition to the amounts authorized for certain old projects specifically brought into the program by the original act and amounting to upwards of $9,000,000. Of the total amount authorized $190,000,000 is for land and buildings in the District of Columbia. Moreover, at places where abandoned sites and buildings are sold the proceeds are to be applied against the cost of the new project. The estimated sale value of sites and buildings to be so replaced amounts to approximately $69,000,000 and about $6,700,000 has been realized from such sales up to the present time.

In accordance with the provisions of the legislation above referred to specific authorizations have been made for 817 projects at limits of cost aggregating $466,800,000. Under authority of these authorizations obligations have been incurred, up to June 30, 1931, amounting to $175,560,000, of which $73,633,000 were incurred in the fiscal year 1931. It is expected that obligations to be incurred in the fiscal year 1932 will amount to $155,000,000, and if this is brought about there will be a balance of over $136,000,000 available for obligation in the fiscal year 1933. It is apparent, therefore, that specific authorizations for individual projects already made are sufficient to carry the construction program through the fiscal year 1933.

To finance the projects which have been specifically authorized, on the basis of providing for maturing obligations, appropriations aggregating $207,030,000 have been made. The total expenditures thereunder to the close of the fiscal year 1931 amounted to $117,890,000, leaving an unexpended balance of $89,140,000, and it is estimated that $140,000,000 additional will be required to meet payments which will become due up to the close of the fiscal year 1933. To provide the additional funds which will be necessary to meet payments to the close of the fiscal year 1932 a supplemental estimate for $20,000,000 will be transmitted to Congress for consideration in connection with the first deficiency bill, and $120,000,000 is included in this Budget for payments to be made in the fiscal year 1933.

In addition to the building program referred to above, additional appropriations aggregating $28,680,000 have been made for the purchase of land in the District of Columbia. The expenditures thereunder to the close of the fiscal year 1931 amounted to $22,569,000, leaving an unexpended balance of $6,111,000 available for subsequent purchases. Additional appropriations under this authorization are not required at this time.

The War Department is also carrying forward a building program for the housing of military personnel, for hospitals, utilities, and administration activities, and for technical buildings for the Air Corps made necessary by the need for replacing World War temporary construction and to provide generally for the increase in the pre-war strength of the Regular Army, including the expansion of the Air Corps. There has already been appropriated $89,311,000 which, with the contract authorization of not to exceed $3,000,000 contained in the War Department appropriation act for 1932, practically exhausts the authorizations so far granted by law for continuing the program. The estimates for 1933 carry $2,250,000 to meet obligations under the contract authorization of $3,000,000. For the Panama Canal the estimates for 1933 provide $700,000 for new buildings and structures.

For the Veterans' Administration this Budget provides $12,877,000 for additional hospital and domiciliary facilities. Of this amount, $10,877,000 is covered by the authorization of $20,877,000 provided by the act approved March 4, 1931, leaving $5,000,000 yet to be appropriated thereunder, and $2,000,000 is for completing the authorizations contained in the acts approved June 21, 1930, and July 3, 1930, for the erection of two national soldiers' homes, one in the South and one in the Northwest.

For the Navy Department, estimates aggregating $4,337,000 are included in the Budget to provide for hospitals, barracks, shop buildings, hangars, storehouses, etc.

For the Interior Department, a total of $1,815,200 is provided for new buildings, of which $642,510 is for the Indian Service, $312,700 for the National Park Service, and $860,000 for Howard University.

The estimates for the District of Columbia provide $3,818,500 for various buildings, including $1,600,000 for continuing the construction of the municipal center, $1,491,000 for school buildings, $490,000 for hospitals, and $237,500 for other purposes.

The estimates for the Department of Justice provide $962,000 for construction at the various penitentiaries and the industrial reformatory; for completion of the United States Southwestern Reformatory at El Reno, Okla., and the United States Hospital for Defective Delinquents at Springfield, Mo., $1,850,000 and $1,250,000, respectively; for Federal jails, $100,000; and for the National Training School for Boys, Washington, D. C., $124,000; a total of $4,286,000.

For the Department of State, $450,000 is provided to continue the acquisition of sites and buildings and the initial furnishing of buildings for the use of diplomatic and consular establishments and other agencies of the United States in foreign countries.

The total amount provided in this Budget for the procurement of sites and the construction of buildings is, therefore, $150,534,000—a very large increase over normal activities in this direction.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

The estimates for national defense under the War and Navy Departments for 1933 aggregate $644,650,000 as compared with the appropriations for 1932 for this purpose totaling $695,691,000, a decrease of $51,041,000. These amounts exclude all items of a nonmilitary nature.

The net decrease for the War Department amounts to $33,952,000. This is due mainly to the fact that owing to lowered commodity costs there will be carried forward into 1933 large stocks of subsistence, clothing, and other supplies, and to a decrease in the present estimates from the appropriations for 1932 of funds to carry forward the Army building program. The postponement of other projects where practicable without serious detriment to the maintenance, operation, and training of the Army has also been a material factor in effecting reductions in the estimates for 1933.

Provision is made in these estimates for average active strength of 12,000 commissioned officers, 924 warrant officers, and 118,750 enlisted men of the Regular Army, and 6,500 enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts; for an actual average strength of 185,000 officers and men of the National Guard; for the training of 20,722 members of the Organized Reserves for varying periods; for the enrollment and instruction of 127,565 students in Reserve Officers' Training Corps units in schools and colleges and the training of 7,200 of this number in 42 camps; and for 30 days' attendance at citizens' military training camps of 37,500 trainees. With one or two very minor exceptions these strengths are the same as those provided for 1932.

For the Navy Department the items contained in the estimates for purposes of national defense for 1933 amount to $342,606,000. The comparable amount appropriated for 1932 is $359,694,000. This indicates a decrease under 1932 of $17,088,000. This decrease includes $15,000,000 for ordinary maintenance and operating expenses of the fleet and the shore establishment, $8,000,000 for shore projects, and $7,150,000 for construction of new ships. It provides an increase of $15,000,000 for modernization of battleships. The items for ordinary maintenance and operation of the fleet and shore establishments provide for maintaining during 1933 an average of 79,700 enlisted men of the Navy, the same as provided for 1932, and an average of 15,343 enlisted men of the Marine Corps as against 17,500 men provided for 1932. Under these estimates no fighting vessels will be decommissioned and no navy yards or training stations will be closed. Other decreases in requirements are due in part to the continuation of the so-called "rotation plan" for the employment of vessels, recently adopted by the Navy Department, which lends itself to both economy and efficiency in fleet operations, and in part to reduced costs of supplies and materials.

The estimates of $31,400,000 for the construction of new vessels, compared with the appropriation of $38,550,000 for 1932, indicates a decrease of $7,150,000. This, however, is a facial decrease only. When the cash balances to be carried forward from prior years, and the amount to be made available by transfer from the naval supply account fund, are taken into consideration, the total that will be available for ship construction in 1933 is estimated at $57,000,000. The availability for 1933 exceeds in amount the expenditures for ship construction in any one of the last 10 years. The expenditures in 1923 were $46,682,000; 1924, $41,697,000; 1925, $34,022,000; 1926, $25,250,000; 1927, $27,430,000; 1928, $36,935,000; 1929, $46,760,000; 1930, $49,872,000; 1931, $37,944,000; and for 1932 are estimated at $53,000,000. The amount available for 1933 will provide for normal progress in construction of every vessel now authorized by law and permitted under treaty restrictions except six destroyers the laying down of which has been postponed and, in addition, for beginning construction of one more 8-inch-gun cruiser in January, 1933, which is the earliest date permitted under the terms of the London treaty.

RIVERS AND HARBORS AND FLOOD CONTROL

The estimate for the annual appropriation for the maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works contained in this Budget is in the same amount as was appropriated for 1932, namely, $60,000,000. The emergency appropriations made last December for public works with a view to increasing employment contained $22,500,000 for rivers and harbors, which is in addition to the annual appropriations of $55,000,000 for 1931 and $60,000,000 for 1932. Viewed alone, this advance in the program would indicate that some reduction from $60,000,000 would be justified in the estimate for 1933. This, however, is not the case, as the Government has given tentative assurances as to early dates of fulfillment which will require the full amount of the appropriation requested for 1933.

For flood control the 1933 estimates of annual appropriations are $3,000,000 less than the appropriations for 1932, this difference being the amount of the emergency appropriation made last December.

The total of the estimates contained in this Budget for rivers and harbors (including maintenance and operation of Dam No. 2, Muscle Shoals) and flood control is $104,182,000, of which $70,142,000 is for rivers and harbors and $34,040,000 for flood control. The total of $104,182,000 includes $10,537,000 to meet the requirements under authorizations of law covering permanent specific and indefinite appropriations, advances, and contributions for rivers and harbors and flood-control work.

RETIREMENT FUNDS

Pending a revaluation of the civil service retirement and disability fund, the estimate contained in this Budget for the financing of the Government's liability to the fund calls for the same amount as was appropriated for 1932, $20,850,000. For the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund, however, the estimate contained in this Budget is $416,000, as against an estimate and appropriation of $215,000 for 1932. This increase is based upon an actuarial valuation recently made by the Bureau of Efficiency and clearly indicates that the Government's liability to the fund was substantially increased by the act approved February 23, 1931. That act, however, continues without change the provision contained in the act of May 24, 1924, that the aggregate appropriations to meet the Government's liability under the retirement fund should at no time exceed the aggregate total of the contributions of the Foreign Service officers theretofore made, and accumulated interest thereon. While the estimate of $416,000 for 1933 may be made without exceeding the limitation contained in this provision, the restrictions thereof will preclude appropriations for 1934 in excess of about $322,000, and for subsequent fiscal years in excess of about $178,000 based on the present pay roll of the Foreign Service officers. Federal contributions of these amounts will be totally inadequate to maintain the solvency of the retirement fund.

The continuation in the act of February 23, 1931, of this restrictive provision indicates clearly that it was not the intention of Congress in the enactment of that law to confer additional retirement benefits upon Foreign Service officers which would prevent the solvency of the retirement fund being maintained by Federal contributions equal to, but not exceeding in the aggregate, the total of the contributions of the Foreign Service officers and accumulated interest on such contributions. The recent actuarial valuation, however, shows conclusively that some further legislative action will be necessary if we are to maintain the solvency of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund. The Secretary of State is aware of this situation and will make appropriate recommendation to the Congress during the present session.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES

Last year in submitting the Budget for 1932 I called attention to the fact that in the preparation of the estimates of appropriations I had refrained from recommending that the requirements for 1932 be met in part by a reappropriation or extension of the availability of unexpended balances of appropriations for the then current or prior fiscal years. In making appropriations for the fiscal year 1932 Congress concurred in this change in policy, and I am therefore submitting the estimates of appropriations for 1933 on the same basis. I mention this because efforts for such economy as would be consistent with the public welfare have resulted in unexpended balances, both actual for last year and estimated for this year, which would have made it possible substantially to reduce the amount of direct appropriations requested in many of the estimates contained in this Budget had the old practice been continued. This reduction would have totaled about $70,000,000.

CONCLUSION

We have recently closed one fiscal year and are now advanced into another year where the depression in business has resulted, on the one hand, in a heavy falling off in receipts and, on the other hand, in large Federal expenditures to provide work to assist in the relief of unemployment.

The welfare of the country demands that the financial integrity of the Federal Government be maintained. This is a necessary factor in the rebuilding of a sound national prosperity. This Budget, with its recommended reductions in appropriations and increases in revenues, presents a definite program to this end involving three steps—first, a material reduction in the anticipated deficit for the current fiscal year; second, a relation between receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1933 which will avoid a further increase in the public debt during that year; and third, a balanced budget for 1934.

To carry out this program it is important to emphasize the fact that we are now in a period where Federal finances will not permit of the assumption of any obligations which will enlarge the expenditures to be met from the ordinary receipts of the Government.

I am confident that the Congress realizes this situation and will give it full consideration in passing upon matters which may contemplate any such additions to our spending program. To those individuals or groups who normally would importune the Congress to enact measures in which they are interested, I wish to say that the most patriotic duty which they can perform at this time is to themselves refrain and to discourage others from seeking any increase in the drain upon public finances.

HERBERT HOOVER.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn, the adjournment being until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 10, 1931, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1931

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

O Lord of life and light, do Thou hear us as we pray, for Thou art our refuge. When the foundations of the earth are being removed and the firmament is melting, the children of men will still be lifting their appealing souls to Thee as "The Rock of Ages." Let us so work and love and live that our fellow men shall bless Thy holy name forever; there is no ambition that can claim a more glorious destiny. Do Thou invest our hearts and minds with Thy love and wisdom and hold them safe against the assaults of all evil. Grant, O God, that the mission of representative government may be fulfilled by adherence to a sturdy ideal of rugged justice—granting to all men the right to work and win a fair share of the good things of life. Work in us and carry forward to a fine development all the processes by which the Republic is to live. In the name of the world's Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

JOHN SEVIER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of the proceedings which were held in Statuary Hall under orders of the House on April 19, 1931, when the State of Tennessee presented a statue of its first governor, Hon. John Sevier, to the United States.

I ask unanimous consent that this copy of the proceedings shall be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following copy of the proceedings which were held in Statuary Hall under orders of the House on April 19, 1931, when the State of Tennessee presented a statue of its first governor, Hon. John Sevier, to the United States, with Mrs. Joseph Hayes Acklen, State regent of Tennessee, Daughters of the American Revolution, presiding.

The proceedings are as follows:

INVOCATION BY THE REV. RUFUS W. WEAVER, D. D., OF WASHINGTON

Almighty God, gathered in this place made sacred by many notable events in our national history, we invoke Thy gracious benediction. We acknowledge Thee as the source of every good and perfect gift and thank Thee that Thou hast bestowed upon us and all the American people Thy manifold blessings. We thank Thee for the institutions we possess, whose establishment was made possible for us by the devotion of our fathers. They were inspired and guided by Thy Spirit in their heroic endeavor to transform this wilderness into a happy land with all the benefits of a Christian civilization. To-day our thoughts are dwelling appreciatively upon our heritage. We lift up our hearts to Thee in deepest gratitude. As we review the history of our people we find many evidences of Thy providential care. As we place in this hall where are assembled the bronze and marble figures of men eminent in our national life one of Tennessee's greatest heroes we pray that there may come to us and to all the people of this Nation a new appreciation of the sacrifices made by our fathers and a new devotion to Thee because of Thy providential care and unmerited love to us as a people. Grant that there may be given to us divine grace so that we may dedicate ourselves to a truer and nobler patriotism in which we will recognize Thy divine sovereignty over the nations of men. Bless, we pray Thee, those who shall participate in these exercises and grant that through the ministry of this hour not only shall the memory of one man's great devotion to his country's cause be impressed upon us but that his patriotic spirit may permeate all who are citizens of our Nation. These blessings we ask in the name of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS BY THE PRESIDING OFFICER, MRS. JOSEPH HAYES ACKLEN

It is a privilege for the sons and daughters of Tennessee to come together to-day to place in the Hall of Fame in their Nation's Capitol the statue of Tennessee's first governor, John Sevier, the beau chevalier, the gallant soldier, the hero of Kings Mountain.

John Sevier is but one of a galaxy of great men that Tennessee has given to our Nation. Here stands our mighty Jackson, who forever settled the question of American independence; James K. Polk, who gave an empire to his country, sleeps in the shadow of our capitol in Nashville; while our Davy Crockett wrote his name in letters of flame on the walls of the Alamo; and grim Sam Houston became the governor of two States; while the gray-eyed man of destiny, William Walker, led his half-clad force to the presidency of a foreign nation.

These tall men gave to our State the name of "Volunteer," and we are proud of all that it signifies. Tennessee stretches like a varicolored ribbon through the center of our Union from where her plains roll down to meet the Father of the Waters through the fertile basin of middle Tennessee on to the sun-kissed peaks of east Tennessee, where John Sevier summoned his mountain men to march to victory and Kings Mountain.

His was not only the ability of a warrior but he was a statesman and possessed rare judgment and knowledge of men. To his comrades he was "Nolichucky Jack," and when they heard his battle cry, "Here they are! Come on, boys," there were no laggards.

To-day we are happy to honor his name and to place this son of Tennessee among this distinguished company of men representing the great of our land.

It is my privilege to present to you the president of the Tennessee Historical Society, Judge John H. DeWitt, who will represent the Governor of Tennessee in presenting this statue to the United States Government. Judge DeWitt.

ADDRESS OF PRESENTATION OF THE STATUE, BY HON. JOHN H. DEWITT, JUDGE OF THE TENNESSEE COURT OF APPEALS AND PRESIDENT OF THE TENNESSEE HISTORICAL SOCIETY, REPRESENTING THE GOVERNOR OF TENNESSEE

Mr. Secretary, Madam Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, to-day we crown with an everlasting homage this illustrious pioneer who built a great Commonwealth. The life of John Sevier spanned the period of settlement from the Alleghenies to the Mississippi. His was the largest part in establishing a State in a beautiful country into which others might come and enjoy the sweets of peace and prosperity. It was his stupendous contribution to our civilization. For 40 years he gave his life to the service of his country and in that service died.

Upon me as the appointed representative of the Governor of Tennessee there devolves the high privilege of presenting this statue of John Sevier to stand for all time in Statuary Hall as the symbol of a great soul and the reminder of a wonderful career. In this very hall in which John Sevier sat for four years as a lawmaker, casting every vote as a true patriot amid the terrible crisis of war, his image will remain as that of one justly classed among the great of all the Nation who are here represented in marble or in bronze. The people of the State of Tennessee have, by expression in the public acts of her general assembly, set forth their homage to their great hero and first governor by providing that his statue be placed here in companionship with that of her other immortal, Andrew Jackson.

The torch of history lights the shadowy ways of the present and opens to our discernment the courses of things yet to come. History is "the rival of time, the depository of great actions, the witness of the past, the example of the present, the monitor to the future." It is only by the true interpretation and preservation of the lives of those who have chiefly made the State and the Nation—their ideals of liberty, of government, of enlightened society, of individual character—that our history and our ideal destiny can be understood; and in that sense it is true that "history is the essence of innumerable biographies." It is upon these principles that the State of Tennessee erects this statue in commemoration of the hero and statesman who was the chieftain of her people in the era of her beginnings, in an age demanding the greatest courage and self-sacrifice, in a primitive period that is now Homeric in our historical perspective and our patriotic esteem. It is because this great leader was the sure protector of his people, never failing them in direst crises, always saving them without heed of his own ease or safety; because his leadership made possible the establishment of a great Commonwealth and opened the way for the civilization of the Southwest; and because his was a life of long and invaluable devotion to the service of his country without real pecuniary reward, that his name and memory are dear especially to Tennesseans and are revered by all who love liberty, appreciate courage, and believe in patriotism.

Out of the valley of Virginia came John Sevier as a young man, with wife and little children, in the providence of God to become the beloved leader and successful defender of the first settlement of English-speaking people west of the Alleghenies. He was an aggressive pioneer. The people among whom he cast his lot were sturdy settlers who had bravely revolted against oppressive government and moved into the wilderness beyond the mountains. They were motivated by an intense longing for freedom. They saw large opportunity for economic independence in those fair lands to which they went. For more than 20 years their lives were in danger from the implacable savages, and during the Revolution they were threatened with destruction by the resolute British. Yet they did not quail. Never were a people more desperate with courage, never were they more sustained by the perfect confidence of a wise leadership. Primitive as they were, they had faith that their destiny was the development of a great civilization. They depended upon the providence of the Almighty, yet exerted their own powers of body and will to the very farthest. They shed their blood, endured captivity and privation, and maintained their homes and communities by overcoming all hardships. They followed Sevier time after time to the punishment of murderous Indians in order that their lives might be saved. They sent their stoutest men under Sevier, Shelby, and Campbell to the glorious victory at Kings Mountain. They fought under Sevier with Marion and Greene. They did a noble part in the war for American independence. Of them and their leader the words of a great Athenian may be fitly said:

"Those undoubtedly must be owned to have the greatest souls who, most acutely sensible of the miseries of war and the sweets of peace, are not hence in the least deterred from facing danger."

Sacrifice is the law of life and progress. It is the principle of salvation. Faith and courage are the sustaining elements of life and civilization. It was through the exercise of these supreme qualities that peace came at last to those, our forefathers. Thousands of settlers joined them from the older Commonwealths. They erected a State upon the broad principles of democracy and ordered liberty. They chose with unanimity as their first governor the outstanding hero of their struggles, the avatar of the spirit which had animated them through all their darkest years. He had not only led them in battle but always to victory. He had served in the First Congress as the first Member from the region west of the Alleghenies. He had served in the Senate of North Carolina and as Governor of the abortive State of Franklin. He had served as a member of the Territorial Council under Governor Blount. He practiced an adroit diplomacy with the mother State, with the wily Spaniards to the southwest, and with the hostile Cherokees. He labored with much success toward the relief of economic distress, for opening avenues of trade, and finding markets for the products of husbandry and industry. His course during all the 12 years of his service as governor was carefully directed to the accomplishment of these ends and the proper development of the infant Commonwealth. The fruits of his wise and patriotic devotion are a heritage to his people to this day.

At the close of his long governorship our hero did not abate his devotion and service. He was a State senator and then for the remainder of his life he was a Member of the National House of Representatives. He died in the wilderness of Alabama while serving as a commissioner to settle troublesome issues of boundary lines with the Creek Indians.

Great in his limited field of public life, Sevier was also splendid in his domestic life. He had a large plantation in the beautiful valley of the Nolichucky, which was a marvel of comfort, convenience, and generous hospitality. He owned large tracts of other lands and engaged in schemes for their development, but he died comparatively poor. It was because his life was devoted first of all to the service of his country. He was the father of 18 children and his many descendants have rendered illustrious service along all the avenues of life.

Of Sevier as a military leader the historian Phelan said: "His rule of tactics was extreme caution in the absence or concealment of the enemy, reckless impetuosity in their presence." His customary battle order, "Here they are! Come on boys, come on!" serves to stir one's pulse with its implication of the furious onset with the leader foremost in the fray. Of his personal traits the same historian also said: "To his men he evinced that suave cordiality and well-judged familiarity characteristic of all the great captains of the world. His enthusiasm, his personal daring, his resolute quickness, his knightly disposition, made him the idol of his soldiers and his neighbors. His tenderness to his wife and his generosity to his children were proverbial. His house was always open, and nearly all of his expeditions against the Indians were partly at his own expense or the expense of his family. He was popularly known as 'Nolichucky Jack,' and the grim mountaineers worshiped him with an extravagance of adoration. His chief claim to a high order of ability is justified by his clear vision of the needs of his people and of the future requirements of the State whose greatness he foresaw. To say that he was in his sphere a statesman of the first order of ability, and that as a warrier he was excelled by none who engaged in the same mode of warfare, and that he never lost a battle, claims for him a high place among the great men of the world. Only he acted on a small stage.

Tennesseans have ever been noted as a people of courage and conviction. They have been lovers of liberty and self-government. They have stood shoulder to shoulder on innumerable battlefields and shed their blood for their convictions. The spirits of John Sevier and Andrew Jackson and a host of other heroes have passed to them from one generation to another. They are true Americans and such they will remain.

"Everywhere, in the sweat of the long day, in the hand that places beam on beam, behind the plow and the eye that marks the straight new road, in the mine and the mill and the workshop, the father's work goes on from son to son. Of such is immortality."

Mr. Secretary, representing the governor and in behalf of the people of the State of Tennessee, I present to the President of the United States, through you as his representative, for its Hall of Fame this statue of a great pioneer of the old Southwest, a great soldier, a constructive statesman, but greater still, this statue of a courageous and unselfish man.

REMARKS BY EMBREE HOSS HEADMAN

I unveil this statue to the continued glory of the Volunteer State and the undying fame of her first governor. To have such an unparalleled honor makes this the greatest day of my life. May we, his descendants who remain in Tennessee and those of us who go to other States and countries, carry on for untold ages his spirit of patriotism, his ideals of citizenship, his honor, and his courage.

REMARKS BY FENTON ALLEN GENTRY

There is little I can add to the splendid tribute to this great man, but I am glad of the opportunity to express my appreciation of the privilege and pleasure of participating in this ceremony. In behalf of the younger men of the Southwest I wish to add my recognition and theirs of the honor and glory of John Sevier, whose far-seeing statesmanship, courage, patriotism, and sacrifice helped to make possible the country of which Tennessee is a great Commonwealth, and whose glorious record of 35 victories out of 35 battles should endear him permanently to the youth of the land. May he always be held, as he deserves, high in the grateful and affectionate esteem of those whose well-being and freedom he did so much to make an enduring reality.

ADDRESS OF ACCEPTANCE OF THE STATUE, IN BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT, BY THE HON. F. TRUBEE DAVISON, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR

The War Department is deeply appreciative of the invitation to participate in the unveiling of this memorial to Gen. John Sevier, whose illustrious record as a soldier and as a statesman is an inspiration to those familiar with his exceptionally outstanding achievements.

There are some men who through their courage, wisdom, and initiative write chapters in the life of their country which lift the ordinary man out of the rut of the commonplace and spur him on to simulate those who blazed the trail along which this Nation has marched to liberty and greatness. Among the men who dedicated their lives to the blazing of that trail the name of John Sevier shines with a brightness that will never fade or be forgotten.

General Sevier lived to the allotted age of 70 and every one of his adult years was devoted to public service and constructive patriotic effort. General Sevier was a soldier; but he was more than that. He was a member of that small but chosen group whose spiritual courage and unselfish zeal made them tireless crusaders in the cause of progress—not for themselves but for all. He was a statesman, but his statesmanship was not of the kind that found expression in oratory. It was rather that of the pioneer who builds an empire in the wilderness and, once more, not for himself but for posterity.

We can not but be thrilled by the story of courage and unselfish effort that is the life of John Sevier. I vision those early days on the eastern fringe of the Mississippi Valley, which in 1773 was the threshold of the West, where, persecuted by the British and harried by Indians, he and his family, friends, and neighbors—hardy and fearless men and women grouped into a frontier community—laid the foundation for what is now the great State of Tennessee.

Almost from the very day he arrived in the Watauga community on the Holston River, Sevier took an active part in the affairs of the settlement. He was a young man, still under 30, and yet he was elected one of the five judges who administered the law.

Prior to the time Sevier migrated with his family from Virginia—he married at 17—he had had considerable military experience in the Indian wars, in which he served with rank of captain, and it was through this experience, combined with a natural gift for strategy, that he won signal military honors.

There were but few occasions, from the early seventies to as late as 1793, when Sevier was not in the field. Between 1777 and 1781, for instance, he participated in 35 battles and never lost one. His leadership at Kings Mountain was outstanding. Between 1781 and 1784 he waged at least half a dozen brilliant campaigns against the Indians in his effort to push forward and make secure the new empire he helped to erect.

Indeed, John Sevier was a great soldier but a man who took his sword in hand to construct and not to destroy and what the soldier won the statesman improved. It was he who drew the petition asking that the frontier country in which he lived be annexed to North Carolina. This accomplished, he was the first to represent that district in the provincial congress and one of the framers of the first constitution of North Carolina. Later—from 1796, when Tennessee became a State, until 1801—he was the first Governor of Tennessee and served three terms. He was major general of the militia from 1801 to 1803, when he was reelected governor—this time to serve until 1810. The following two years he was a member of the State senate, resigning in 1811 to go to Washington as a Member of Congress, where he was of singular service as a member of the Military Affairs Committee during the war with England. He was, in fact, offered a general's commission but declined it on account of his advanced age.

In 1815 President Monroe appointed Sevier to head a commission authorized to make a survey in Alabama for the purpose of defining the lines of the Creek Indians. The office was accepted, and he started on his last campaign. He died near Fort Decatur on the Tallapoosa River on September 24, 1815, one day after his seventieth birthday.

I have given but a brief outline of a career devoted to exceptional patriotic service and of a life crammed with the romance that most of us succeed in finding only in books. In paying him tribute, let me quote what a great American of later day—President Roosevelt—said of him:

"Sevier was a gentleman by birth and breeding. * * * To the end of his days he was an interested and intelligent observer of men and things, both in America and Europe. He corresponded on intimate and equal terms with Madison, Franklin, and other of our most polished statesmen. * * * Sevier was a very handsome man, reputed during his life the very handsomest in Tennessee. He was tall, fair-skinned, blue-eyed, brown haired, of slender build, with erect, military carriage and commanding bearing. * * * From his French forefathers he had inherited a gay, pleasure-loving temperament that made him the most charming of companions. His manners were polished and easy, and he had great natural dignity."

Such was John Sevier, the man whose memorial we are unveiling to-day, and whose deeds, acts, and thoughts can best be summarized by saying that he was in truth a gentleman, statesman, a patriot, and a soldier.

The early history of any community is generally the most important, because the initial influences inevitably carry on through the decades that follow and leave an indelible imprint. Sevier's vigorous and effective personality and constructive leadership have unquestionably been dominating factors in the glorious history of the Commonwealth of which he was the first governor. Primarily for that reason not only the sons and daughters of Tennessee are eternally indebted to him but likewise the Nation as a whole.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN SEVIER BY DR. FLORA MYERS GILLENTINE, HONORARY STATE REGENT OF TENNESSEE AND HISTORIAN-GENERAL OF THE NATIONAL SOCIETY, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Fame is clearly a woman. Her favors are often bestowed with a partiality born of the heart rather than reason. Tennessee is the proud mother of three Presidents—three whose plaudits rang even beyond national borders in a day when the radio was not; three noted for resolution and deed, for temerity and tenacity, for principle and punch. Polk was the architect of Manifest Destiny; Johnson the hammered unyielding bulwark of a beaten minority; Jackson the vibrant voice of a new democracy that despised artificiality and practiced a real political equality. These were stalwart, achieving sons, worthy of the pride of any mother. Yet there was an elder son to whom Tennessee owed more than to any of these, for 'twas he whose devoted and mainly unsung labors made their careers possible. Even to this day the Nation as a whole has remained almost as unaware of his stirring deeds, his resolute and straight-thinking statesmanship, as of his favorite Mount Pleasant sleeping in the sequestered shadows of the Great Smokies.

He was, like Jackson, an adopted son, a Huguenot-sired Virginian of dash, courtesy, charm, and courage, who was at his best where difficulties thickened and self-reliance was man's sole assistance. Not long ago I heard a commencement orator beseeching a group of present-day American graduates to "consider the banana; the moment it leaves the bunch it gets skinned." John Sevier was no such American. He never needed to cling to the "bunch." He was capable of looking out for himself and others, though the country about him swarmed with unfigurative skinners, red and real. Naturally, therefore, he turned to the frontier. Where Washington, 13 years his senior, dreamed of western settlements, Sevier made them, developed them, defended them. Potent and impatient, he burned with a zeal that brooked no stay from the mere accident of youth. At the age of 19 he was planting the town of New Market in the Shenandoah Valley. Eight years later, already an experienced town builder, he was in the Watauga settlements, at once attracting note as the potential architect of a broader community.

At Watauga, in 1772, life was notably simple. It was soon discovered that, among the complexities of civilization left behind, was included even a theoretical government. A settlement supposed to be—in that day when not every child imbibed an adequate knowledge and sampling of geography from a dust-collecting rumble seat—in that day a settlement intended to be in Virginia turned out to be in the no man's land of North Carolina, where tyrannical Tryon and rough Regulators were engaged in making a none too attractive land less habitable. They might not be expected to drop their feud to extend the blessings of such civil authority to a transmontane infant community, even though there were tarheel sons among the squatters. Meanwhile the original Americans, real owners of the soil, betokened an embarrassingly earnest interest in the activities of the newcomers and in manner more potent than words openly urged their return to more settled sections.

Abandonment to some is a calamity. To these Americans it was a challenging opportunity. From it was born the Watauga Association, the first completely free government drawn up by an all-native American community "by the free consent of every individual" given in a great town meeting. Prominent in the achievement of this, and among the five commissioners honored with the task of translating consent into control, was John Sevier, thus an "elder" though still under 30.

His daring defense of the community against the Indians was pursued with a vigor which soon established him as a power with them, whether in council or conflict. Through outsmarting them in the employment of their own favorite weapon of surprise attack, through an unmatchable celerity of movement even in their own familiar country, and the threading of trails deemed impassable even by red men, he developed an efficiency in Indian warfare which was, by 1790, to win him a brigadier generalship over the eastern part of the territory south of the Ohio and ultimately the praise of no less an authority than Theodore Roosevelt as the "most renowned Indian fighter of the Southwest"—the scene, be it remembered, of the activities of no less potent a rival than Andrew Jackson. Death found him still on their trail—on a mission from the Nation to the Cherokees.

When the notes of the Liberty Bell penetrated to the quiet valleys of the upper Tennessee the infant communities, with enthusiastic acclaim, became Washington district. As one of the bearers of a petition for their incorporation into North Carolina, where they might play a more active part, Sevier threaded the mountains in 1776. The petition granted, the riflemen from Washington County played a brilliant part in the war in the South. 'Twas largely they who won Kings Mountain, Sevier commanding the right wing in that engagement. Though there was neither a tent nor a bayonet in any of the western divisions, they had outmarched and outfought the King's Own under the capable, wily Ferguson and contributed to the flickering colonial cause confidence as well as victory. Victory brought to Sevier a difficult personal conflict between popularity and justice. Emulating the style of the British irregulars over whom they had won, the frontiersmen chose 30 commissioned redcoats to furnish forth a vengeful hanging bee. Twenty-one owed their lives to the peremptory orders of Sevier and Shelby, who spurned to become mere rivals of the British in butchery, and checked the executions by their sullen followers after nine of the chosen captives had tasted the virtues of their own oft-prescribed hempen treatment.

Other days of testing were ahead. For Washington County peace proffered more perils than war. North Carolina in 1784 ceded the territory to Congress to comply with the conditions under which Maryland had ratified the Articles of Confederation. Thereupon, in Washington County, North Carolina government ceased. Congress, exhausted with confabs over existing problems, made no haste to seek control over additional ones. Again the frontiersmen acted. August 23, 1784, at Jonesboro, a convention of which Sevier was made president, decided, against his advice it is reported, upon meeting congressional neglect and Carolinian abandonment by the erection of a separate State. Thus was born the State of Franklin, of which Sevier was chosen governor. This post he loyally served for some four years, tenaciously holding, at the request of his neighbors, against North Carolinian attempts at reclaiming a government against whose establishment he had advised. When the inevitable happened, and Franklin, unrecognized and unadmitted by Congress, bowed to North Carolina's power in 1788, he was arrested for treason. He easily escaped from prison, however, and the formalities having been satisfied was not further molested despite the machinations of malicious neighbors. In fact, it is a measure of the man that he was permitted to sit in the North Carolina Senate as representative of the section he had led against the State's authority after simply taking an oath of allegiance. He was big enough to live down the charge of treason. More significant is it that he was brave enough to dare it when duty and his neighbors' need demanded it.

Sevier's status as a North Carolinian was short lived. In 1790 a stronger Congress—that of the present Union—accepted the receded Washington County, and John Sevier's services as representative were transferred to the National Capital where he appeared as the Delegate for the Territory of Tennessee.

The full measure of Tennessee's trust in his probity and prudence was revealed six years later when the Territory became the State of Tennessee and claimed John Sevier as its first governor. Its satisfaction with its choice was testified by his reelection for a second term, and then a third. With him it was three times and out, but out for only the two years necessary to qualify him for another series of three successive terms. Not even yet content that he should lay down public burdens, the Volunteer State drafted him two years later for service in the House of Representatives in Washington, a mandate he was still bearing when death overtook him at 70, the active agent of an enlarged but confiding public centering at the Nation's Capital.

It is fitting that Tennessee should again send him as her representative here. Once he represented her interests effectively. To-day he represents her ideals of the kind of manhood, statesmanship, public servant she delights to honor. His may constitute a not wholesome exhibit here in the days of greedy blocs and legislationless—I was about to say lawless—congressional sessions. John Sevier was a simple, direct, daring but prudent frontiersman who faced life to do, not merely to obstruct; one far more interested in the definite potentialities of doing than in the vague possibilities of "being done."

Tennessee contributes in this statue of John Sevier far more than a tribute to her first governor and her loyal servant. She contributes a man of national mold and significance, a builder in an era of foundation laying, a man more fruitful than many of his more broadly blazoned contemporaries. He was a giant who overstepped the mountains and planted homes in the heart of America. Contemporaneously with Boone he threaded the Alleghanies, but while Boone remained essentially a track finder, Sevier became a State maker. He was a typical pioneer of the better sort, inheriting a dash of French audacity and Virginian culture, and combining with it the militancy of an Andrew Jackson and the persistence of an Andrew Johnson, while demonstrating a constructive statesmanship enjoyed by neither. Frontiersman, Indian fighter, patriot, statesman, man, a leading volunteer of the Volunteer State, John Sevier may well stand proudly among the Nation's great.

"That man proclaims himself true son
Whose kinship rests on what he's done.
By such a test we now revere
As Tennessee's good John Sevier,
And place him 'mongst the Nation's great,
Who blazed our path and built out State."

PRAYER, BY REV. JAMES I. VANCE, D. D., PASTOR OF THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF NASHVILLE, TENN. (DESCENDANT OF CAPT. ROBERT SEVIER, WHO WAS MORTALLY WOUNDED AT KINGS MOUNTAIN)

Almighty God, to whom be all praise, we Tennesseans have come to place, amid the figures in this hall of undying fame, the face and form of a man who rode into the West and flew the flag of freedom and adventure under which rallied the men who built into statehood the first organized form of representative government beyond the Blue Ridge; who gallantly led the little line which built a wall of courage between the log cabins of the frontier and the tomahawks of the savages; who later became the first governor of our Commonwealth, and whose blood and deeds mix and mingle in all that stirring history and heroism and achievement that paints the winning of the West.

We thank Thee for such a figure in the forefront of our beloved State as John Sevier. As the people from this and other lands pass through this hall and gaze on this statue, may they sense some of the wild and easy daring of a man who never feared the face of foes. As our children and our children's children parade this hall in the long coming years, may the name of "Nolichucky Jack" shed a luster of romance and renown on the growing line.

As we recount the battles that won the war of independence, may Sevier and the Kings Mountain men kindle patriotism and strengthen faith. May the chance to live dangerously never lose its charms for Tennessee. May the stern note of duty never find our hearts hesitant nor our souls slow to respond, and as we face the tasks of to-day and the problems of to-morrow, may those bronze and marble shades of our immortal dead keep us high-minded and unafraid.

In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

By John H. DeWitt, pesident of the Tennessee Historical Society

John Sevier, Commonwealth builder and Revolutionary hero; born in Rockingham County, Va., September 23, 1745.

His father, Valentine Sevier, son of a Huguenot refugee, originally named Xavier, came from London to Baltimore, married Joanna Goode, and settled in Rockingham County. The son John attended schools at Fredericksburg and Staunton. He conducted a store in Dunmore (now Shenandoah) County and traded with the Indians. In 1761 he was married to Sarah Hawkins, who bore to him 10 children. He established a store and there laid out the village of New Market, Va. Reports concerning the land to the southwest circulated in the valley. The Seviers determined to move to that frontier, willing to pay the price in hardship for the benefits from the cheap lands on the Watauga. In 1772 John Sevier was appointed by the colonial governor, Lord Dunmore, as a captain in the Virginia line; but the lure led him to the country where the great drama of his life was to be performed. He made a visit to the Watauga settlements. He was chosen one of the commissioners of government of the Watauga Association, and he was a member of the first court established to maintain order in the settlement. He was afterwards the clerk of the court. In 1773, with his father and brothers, he removed permanently to what is now northeastern Tennessee. For three years he lived on the north side of the Holston in the Keywood settlement. In 1776 he moved his family to the Watauga, near the present location of Elizabethton.

Henceforth John Sevier was the unfailing leader and protector of those settlements. For over 20 years they were in peril from murderous Indians. During the Revolution they were menaced by British and Tories. Those settlements were the very cradle of southwestern civilization. For 40 years the life of John Sevier was devoted to the service of his people and country. His people gave to him the first place in their hearts and always the primacy in leadership. To him they unfailingly turned in the darkest crises, and they were never unrewarded. Sevier's personal characteristics made him popular with his friends and neighbors, and his success in office was due to his good sense, his affability, and his devotion to the public welfare. The historian Haywood said that he "was endowed by nature with those rare qualities which make the possessor in all places and with all people an object of attention and a depository of their confidence—qualities which can not be kept from observation." The historian Ramsey said: "He was fluent, colloquial, and gallant—frolicsome, generous, and convivial—well informed rather than well read. Of books he knew little. Men he had studied well and accurately. Oral communications had been the source of his mental culture and his knowledge. He was impulsive, but his impulses were high and honorable. * * * He was without pride—if that feeling is not one of the ingredients that constitute a laudable ambition—for he was ambitious, not of anything low or ignoble; he was ambitious of fame, character, distinction, and achievement."

That year of 1776 became a turning point in the career of John Sevier. He assisted John Carter and James Robertson in managing the defense of Watauga Fort against the elaborate efforts of the Cherokees to destroy this and all the other over-mountain settlements. It was during an attack upon the Watauga Fort that Sevier rescued from the Indians the woman who later became his second wife, Catherine Sherrill.

In that same year Sevier was one of the representatives of the Washington district in the Provincial Congress of North Carolina. He was elected by that body as lieutenant colonel of the Washington district. He was chosen and served in the convention which framed the first constitution of the State of North Carolina. For some time he lived as a farmer and owner of a water mill 5 miles from Jonesboro, but finally he removed to a large plantation—"Plum Grove"—in the beautiful valley of the Nolichucky River, in Washington County. There he built a comfortable log residence and dispensed a generous hospitality. He became familiarly known as "Nolichucky Jack."

But the terrible Indian warfare continued. All along the frontier from Georgia to Pennsylvania the Cherokees and the Chickamaugas committed depredations. Sevier and his frontier soldiers served with Col. Evan Shelby on a most successful expedition down the Holston and the Tennessee Rivers to the Chickamauga towns near Lookout Mountain. They killed about 40 Indians, burned their towns, destroyed their corn and every other article of provision, and drove away their great stocks of cattle. Such methods were necessary for peace and preservation of the white settlements. The Indians were then unable seriously to menace the settlements until they took advantage of the absence of the "overmountain men" on the Kings Mountain expedition in the fall of 1780.

In 1780 Sevier was commissioned by Gov. Abner Nash colonel commandant of Washington County. In that year, his wife having died, he was married to Catherine Sherrill, known affectionately as "Bonny Kate" in Tennesse history. Of this union eight children were born.

When the British and Tories, under Major Ferguson, were overrunning western North Carolina and threatening to invade the "overmountain" country, Sevier joined with Colonels Campbell and Isaac Shelby in assembling the heroic frontiersmen at Sycamore Shoals and planning the expedition to do battle with Ferguson and his men. Sevier commanded a regiment on the long, toilsome march through the mountainous wilderness. In the Battle of Kings Mountain, on October 7, 1780, he and his sturdy band were first and foremost in the charge on the left wing of the patriot army. He contributed vitally to that glorious victory which marked the turning of the tide of the American Revolution. But he did not rest on this illustrious record.

On the return march from Kings Mountain, Sevier had to deal with a threatened outbreak from the Cherokees in the absence of so many men and guns from the frontier. He had reached home just in time to repel the savage invaders. Without a day's rest he set on foot another expedition.

Placing himself at the head of about 100 men, he set out in advance of other troops who were assembling. It was according to his method of bold, swift dashes. On the third day they encountered a large force of Indians near Boyds Creek and by bold charges achieved a decisive victory without one of their number being even wounded. This battle of Boyds Creek was considered as one of the best fought battles in the border war of Tennessee. The prompt collection of troops and rapid expedition under Sevier saved the frontier from a bloody invasion. Being joined by other forces, Sevier proceeded further into the country of the Cherokees, burned their towns, devastated their fields, and effected a treaty of peace with them.

In 1781 Sevier responded to the call of Gen. Nathanael Greene, led his regiment to South Carolina, and served with Marion until the British were driven to the lines of Charleston.

In 1782 the implacable Chickamaugas began again their work of murder and depredation. Sevier led an expedition against them to the Coosa River, destroyed their towns, killed all their warriors they could find, and returned home. He never hesitated to pursue such destructive warfare when the lives of his people and the existence of the settlements were imperiled. Only by such methods could peace be attained. They caused the Indians each time to move to other lands. Sevier, as no other western leaders did, employed the method of using mounted riflemen in small, well-organized bodies, making rapid and telling movements.

In 1784 Sevier was appointed brigadier general of Washington district by the Legislature of North Carolina. When, because of inability of North Carolina to afford governmental protection to the "overmountain" people, the independent State of Franklin was established, Sevier became its first and only governor, 1785–1788. When that government fell he was arrested for treason, but was never tried, and his disabilities were removed. He was elected to the North Carolina Senate. He was elected and he served as a Member of the First Congress of the United States—the first Congressman west of the Alleghanies. In 1791 he was appointed by President Washington as brigadier general for the Washington district of the territory south of the Ohio. He led in 1793 a punitive expedition as far as Etowah, in Georgia, against the Cherokees and Creeks, with the result that they were never again a menace to the settlements in Tennessee. It is the tradition that he fought in 35 battles and skirmishes, and in all of them was victorious. His battle order was always:

In 1796 Sevier became the first Governor of Tennessee. He was governor for six terms—1796–1801, 1803–1809. In 1802 he served as a commissioner to run the boundary line between Virginia and Tennessee. In 1809 he served as a State senator from Knox County, Tenn. From 1811 until his death he was a member of the United States Congress. He was a faithful adherent of the Madison administration in all the second war with Great Britain.

General Sevier died on September 24, 1815, near Fort Decatur, Ala., where, while a Member of Congress, he was serving as a commissioner appointed by President Madison to fix the Creek Indian boundary according to treaty. In 1889 his remains were removed and reinterred in the grounds of the courthouse at Knoxville, and a graceful marble shaft was erected above his grave.

John Sevier was an outstanding pioneer leader who met with perfect courage every duty, who conquered the wilderness, overcame the deadly foes of his people, and fashioned the State. He was a hero in an age of heroes. His long and illustrious service was rendered peculiarly to his beloved Tennessee, and it opened the way to the settlement and development of the Southwest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President, which was read by the Clerk.

(See Senate proceedings of this day for message of the President, page 221.)

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, at this point I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the President's message; and prior to making the motion I wish to make an announcement. I am instructed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD], Democratic-caucus chairman, to announce that there will be a Democratic caucus in this room to-day at 4 o'clock. Therefore at 4 o'clock I shall move that the committee rise and the House adjourn until to-morrow, and if there are other gentlemen who wish to address the House, they will be heard to-morrow.

I think of nothing of importance that will be presented to the House for the balance of this week. There is no reason why gentlemen who live in near-by cities could not go home.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand it is definitely understood that the time is to be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and one-half by myself during this debate?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNELL. No matter how long it requires?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; no matter how long it requires.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman allow me to prefer a unanimous-consent request before he puts his motion?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Postal Savings System.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the total volume of money in circulation in the United States the middle of October, 1931, was $5,494,000,000. This was $974,000,000 larger than a year earlier, which means that over $1,000,000,000 of currency had been "sleeping," i. e., had been hoarded and lying idle. Mistrust of our bankers had kept this money out of banks and put it into mattresses, tin boxes, trunks, privies, barns, stoves, and socks.

Thus, roughly speaking, one-fifth of all our outstanding currency becomes sterile and unproductive. Our hoarded "sleeping" dollars mean $10 each in credit made unavailable to business. Ten billion dollars of credit is thus lost to trade.

Happily, in this crisis, our Postal Savings System has been of great help. It has rescued and awakened much of this sleeping money. The timid mistrust our banks, but have confidence in Uncle Sam as the president, chairman, board, cashier, and Pooh-Bah of that great thrift agency, the Postal Savings System.

During October, 1931, postal-savings deposits increased about $66,000,000. By the middle of November, 1931, the Post Office Department had approximately 800,000 depositors in its Postal Savings System, and about $575,000,000 in deposits, a new high. In June, 1930, the deposits were but $175,000,000 and the number of depositors 466,000.

After these deposits are received by the Postal Savings System they are redeposited in local qualified banks, and in many cases in the very banks from which they were withdrawn, or which were avoided, because of lack of confidence.

Thus over half a billion dollars of this hoarded money is again put into circulation, and in this way the Postal Savings System brings to light for the uses of trade and industry vast sums of money otherwise secreted and lost.

Many curious stories, all full of human interest, are told concerning the timid souls who bring forth from ingenious hiding places their money and place it in postal savings. From the reports of postmasters and also from authentic news items the following have been gleaned.

From an Eastern State comes this statement:

Quite recently a man signified his intention of opening an account by unrolling a sack and dumping its contents, bills amounting to $5,800, on the desk. When informed that the maximum amount legally acceptable was $2,500, but that a like amount could be deposited in his wife's name, he replied: "No got wife; put in all or none." I further explained that if he must put it all in, I would go down to our bank with him. To this he replied, "No; no bank, never!" That man is to-day wandering about the streets with that amount of money on his person waiting until Uncle Sam will accept it all.

In one case an ill-kempt alien came to the window and placed on the counter a bundle of bills so soiled and so foul smelling that the nature of the cache was quite obvious.

From the far West:

An elderly gentleman of foreign birth, wishing to open a postal-savings account, brought in $1,000, comprised principally of silver dollars and half dollars, which he had been keeping under his mattress in a bag. This had become so bulky that it interfered with his comfort in sleeping.

Another case reported by the same postmaster revealed the fact that a depositor had died intestate, leaving no known heirs. A deputy coroner was appointed administrator and immediately made an extensive search in the shack where the man had lived, finding valuable papers as well as some money beneath the wall paper, which was composed of several thicknesses of newspaper.

A postmaster in a large metropolis reports:

A ship's carpenter for a large refining company presented a number of 10 and 20 dollar bills, amounting to $1,000, which he abstracted from both his socks. The bills were old, wet, and oily. Upon questioning him as to their condition, the information was elicited that he had been on an oil boat for the past two years and had not touched any port in that time long enough to deposit the money, which he had hidden on the boat for fear of its being stolen. A look of peace and contentment overspread his countenance when advised that the two $500 postal-savings certificates being presented to him were of no value to anyone but him, for then he realized that his money was at last in a safe place.

In another instance in the same city a dime saved was $80 found. Joseph was a thrifty soul and found that using a piece of gas pipe in place of a 10-cent hammer materially increased his postal-savings account. After having used this pipe for some time his glance was caught by an obstruction in the pipe, which, upon being poked out into the open, proved to be eight $10 bills of the 1907 issue.

From a southern city:

I had a postal-savings transaction with an old man 64 years of age who runs a small grocery. He had five shoe boxes full of the old, large-size currency amounting to nearly $5,000, and from the moldy odor of it I would judge that it had been buried under the ground. This old man claimed that this money represented a lifetime's savings. It was tied up in little bundles of all denominations with ordinary sewing cotton thread. Of course, under the regulations I was not allowed to take but $2,500 of it.

A further contribution from the same postmaster tells of a Chinaman who wanted to deposit a sum greatly in excess of the authorized amount and when advised that the postal savings could only take $2,500 in his name, he said, "That is all light, I will bling another name." He left the office and in about an hour brought another Chinaman with him who deposited the remainder of the money in his name.

A lady came to my window one morning to have the Postal Savings System explained to her. She was afraid of banks and wasn't sure about the post office being the safest place in the world as she had never deposited any money before. She gave her age as 52. For seven years her "safe-deposit vault" was her bosom, but she had heard of so many people being knocked on the head and robbed that she was getting uneasy and therefore decided to put her money in a safer place. After being assured that not even her husband would ever find out that she had money deposited here, she presented $700 in big, old-fashioned bills.

From the Northwest:

Two men entering the office of the State rural credit commissioner desiring to make deposits of $1,900 and $500 fished the first-named sum out of a section of an inner tube. The other man abstracted a $100 bill from each of five pockets. Tin cans and old boxes, as well as locations on the prairie, are used by many who are fearful that banking has not returned to a stable basis.

A lady living in a large southern city discovered one day that $48 she had placed in a coffee pot had disappeared. Police are looking for one of her roomers, who is missing.

The life's savings of a 71-year-old widow were hoarded in tobacco cans hidden between the ceiling rafters where she could keep her eye on them. Thieves ransacked her home and the savings are among the things missing. A small panel in the ceiling, apparently installed for future use as a ventilator, was the door through which she reached the tobacco cans in their hide-out. And so her savings of 30 years have disappeared for good.

At a post office in the far South a feeble old man, easing his way up to the postal-savings window, inquired, "Cap, is this the place you leave your money?" After being assured that it was, he emptied the contents of two fruit jars which were filled with silver and currency that he wanted to leave at the post office. The clerk noticed a lot of dirt mixed in with the money in the jars, and when questioned the old man replied, "Yes, sir; I had it buried, but I got afraid and dug it up to bring it here and leave it with you; I knew it was safer here."

This from a northern city:

"Ouch! Wow! * * *," etc. "I did not know that I was so near to that blowtorch!" wailed the busy plumber as he felt of his overalls where his hip pocket used to be. "That envelope I had in my pocket is burned to a frazzle and I had $200 in cash in it besides a postal-savings certificate of deposit for $100."

The cash was a total loss; the certificate of deposit was renewed without expense to the plumber.

From an Eastern State:

A man named "Less" is less $575. He hid $75 in a stove. His wife started a fire. He hid $500 in a hay mow. The barn burned down.

A certain man's sock didn't have a foot in it but it "walked away" and with it went $232. The owner, having no trust in banks and finding no security in the corners of his home, entrusted his savings to the care of an old sock, first making sure that it was free from holes. Yesterday, wishing to reassure himself as to the safety of his nest egg, he discovered that the sock, money and all, had disappeared into thin air.

A widow with her life's hoarding of $5,775, which she kept in two trunks, awoke to the realization that the trunks and their contents had been removed during her absence. She said: "I didn't want to keep my money in the bank because I can't read or write and I didn't want to tell strangers how much money I had, so I just kept it in the trunks. I didn't dream of anyone carrying the trunks out and I knew they couldn't unlock them."

Not having heard from her brother in eight years and knowing that he had had a Postal Savings account in a certain northern city, a young lady living in the South solicited the aid of local officials in that service. They learned that he had served in the United States Army during the World War and quickly located him in Washington, D. C., his address being forwarded to the sister

The curious tale of a mainstay tells how an 81-year-old lady sewed $20,000 in her corset for safe-keeping. The corset became lost among some papers which were promptly collected by the trash man. After tracing the regular routine of the trash man detectives found the fortune and the corset and returned both to the aged woman. This sum represented her life's earnings, together with an inheritance she received at the death of her brother.

From South Dakota:

A bond salesman who had made a $2,300 deal with a farmer found some reluctance as to specific payment. He suggested a check would be all right, but the farmer insisted he would have to go some distance for the money. To assure completion of the deal the salesman agreed to transport his customer. After a drive into the open country the farmer ordered a halt. Crawling through a wire fence, he made deductions from post locations, dug away the snow, and uncovered a bag of money, from which he took the cash to make the payment.

From Florida:

Attired in the commonest clothing, driving a mule, and leading a decrepit horse, an old man of 78 passed through the city yesterday. The director of the animal-rescue league noticed the condition of the two animals and the police held the old man for investigation while the horse and mule were treated. The judge found the old man had committed no other offense than driving the aged animals. "The rescue league can take care of them," said the judge, "but something should be done for this poor old man." It was then that the officer introduced five $100 bills and a $20 bill as funds the old man was carrying on his person. "Case discharged, and take that old man to the post office and have him place the money in the Postal Savings," ordered the judge.

From Tennessee:

One depositor called at the window, requesting to be shown a room where he could disrobe in order to get his money which he had in a belt worn around his waist. This belt he had made himself and kept the money in it for six months, sleeping with it all the time. Working in a logging camp, he considered this rather risky. When he finally got to his belt and opened it there was $2,300 in it, and the odor was so strong one could hardly stand to count it.

From Missouri:

On the day following the fire last December which partially destroyed a wing of the White House, a lady called at the postal-savings window and very nervously asked if the destruction of the records in the White House fire had in any way jeopardized her postal-savings account.

From New York State, my State—in fact, from Brooklyn, where the very able postmaster, Albert E. Firman, presides:

In one case a whole family came in—papa, mama, and an old-style family ranging from baby in arms to boys and girls in their teens. The money for deposit was quite a tidy sum, made up almost exclusively of small bills, which were all very badly stained and terribly dirty. The odor was as bad as the discoloration. It was found that the family had been with a construction gang living in the outskirts and that the money had been buried in a can under a stone in a country water-closet. You see, they were transferring their wealth from one place of deposit to another.

A man came to one of our windows and disgorged $500 for a new account. The money was so black with coal dust as to be almost unrecognizable. It had to be brushed off and cleaned up before it could be got into shape. By the time this was done the window ledge looked like a coal bin, and it had to be scrubbed before the ordinary routine could be resumed. It developed that the depositor was a peddler of coal and had hidden his money beneath the coal in his cellar.

A depositor who proved to be an iceman came in to open an account, and, when he spread his money out, the stench was so bad that it had to be aired before it could be handled. On inquiry, it was found that the man had the money concealed in an old horse collar kept where he stabled his horse. On opening the stable the day he made his deposit, he found the horse was chewing up the old collar and within a few moments would have gotten away with the money. You see, occasionally some good does come out of evil.

One depositor used to bring in his money, and it was found to be very cold. Inquiries elicited that he was a butcher and kept the money in his ice box.

A peanut vender used to come to the postal-savings window every day. He spoke broken English, but his difficulty in this respect was more than counterbalanced by the whistle on his cart, which he left in front of the office, blowing full blast, so that it could be heard a block away. A good advertisement, you see, for our postal-savings bank. When asked why he came daily, he explained that it was to have the United States Government protect his money.

An old Italian woman brought in some money to open an account. It was found to be saturated with oil. She said she had been saving the money up in an old olive-oil tin in which she had hidden it for safety. A friend had persuaded her to open a postal-savings account.

A Porto Rican laborer applied for an account and handed in a bundle of 250 one-dollar bills, a few two's, and a five. The money was so rusty, rough, and sandy that the denominations were almost indistinguishable. The man was at first reluctant to explain the condition of the money, but finally said that his father had it buried in Porto Rico. A couple of weeks later he came in again with over $300 of the same kind, explaining that it was the balance of the buried money. He was satisfied that the postal-savings bank was a safer place for his money than burial.

A couple of foreigners, man and wife, speaking very broken English, came to open a joint account for $500. When told that this could not be done they bickered a while between themselves in their native tongue and finally the husband agreed to deposit the money in his wife's name. The wife took from her shopping bag $100 in silver, of which $70 was rolled in paper and the balance loose. Then the husband started emptying his pockets. He had money in every one of them; not a pocket was missed. Some of the bills were folded, others rolled. It formed a pile on the counter and when opened up and counted it amounted to $400. The clerk gasped at the heap. The man, in his broken English, said: "This a very good country; we only here nine months."

From Arkansas:

In one instance a depositor of foreign extraction presented a $1,000 bill of the old size. The clerk remarked on its excellent condition and that it did not appear to have been worn by use. The depositor replied that he knew the bill had not been used for 10 years, as he had had it for that length of time.

From Alabama:

One busy Saturday morning an old southern "mammy" came into the lobby with a market basket on her arm. It was covered with a clean rag and seemed to be very heavy. She came stealthily to the window and whispered: "Mistus, I wants you all to put up dis change for me." Thinking she had a basket of eggs and her "change" was tied up in a bandana as usual, the postmaster was dismayed to see her uncover the basket and disclose a peck of coins—some discolored, some so old the date was undecipherable, some old 3-cent pieces, and many big copper cents. It was all in coins and there were very few dollars, mostly dimes, quarters, nickles, and pennies. She said she had been saving it for 20 years hidden in the middle of her "straw tick," but that she was "gittin' old" and knew we would take care of it till it was needed for her "buryin'."

We have one old negro man who for years has brought $1 every Monday morning. He always says: "I's de one who always puts and never takes." He will have a very respectable funeral.

From Washington State:

One of our depositors, a spiritualist reader, presented $1,000 in $5 and $10 gold pieces upon two widely separated occasions. It was easily discernible that these gold pieces had been in "dirt," and after tactful conversation it was revealed that their hiding place had been old flower pots, such as used to adorn the average "front room." She had evidently had a message from a guiding spirit that Uncle Sam was safer than the old flower pots to which she trusted her gold for a long period of years.

Another woman, middle-aged, had confided in her sweetheart that her money, which some day was to be shared with him, was buried in the back yard. One evening, after a lover's quarrel in which Sir Galahad saw his share fading away, he stole stealthily to the buried treasure and took his promised half, leaving her share in the earth. Going down town, he called the woman and informed her of the transaction. The next day the Postal Savings gained a new depositor and the back yard lost one.

From South Carolina:

An elderly lady called at the office and presented $600 with the request that it be deposited to her credit. While counting the money, the clerk detected a strong odor of cabbage and asked why it smelled so strongly of cabbage, to which the woman replied: "It ought to, because I had it buried in the cabbage patch."

In another instance a lady called to deposit $1,500. The money had a musty smell, something like burnt wood, and the clerk remarked that it must have gone through fire at some time. The depositor replied that she had it buried in the yard, but the house burned down and the spot where the money was buried was covered with the burnt wood. Being in dread of this happening again, she decided to put it in a safer place.

From Oklahoma:

Recently an old fellow deposited with the post office $2,500 of the $4,200 which he had kept hidden in a hollow tree.

From District of Columbia:

A man of means, at the ripe age of 78, ceased putting faith in banks, where he had deposited his savings for years. He drew $17,000 from a banking institution in $1,000 notes. These he placed in a milk bottle, enclosing it in turn in a piece of terra-cotta pipe, and burying the whole near his lonely house in the suburbs. Returning one day about dusk from a conference with his lawyers, he saw that dirt near his cache had been freshly turned, and he investigated. The $17,000 was gone. He called in the police. It was their turn to be amazed when, asked if he had any more money about the premises, he drew from various niches and crannies another $11,000. He accounted for $2,500 more by saying that he had placed it in the safe-keeping of a friend soon after discovering the robbery. Questioned as to why he had shifted his money from a safe repository to the "back yard" bank, he said he was afraid a court might order it attached.

From Illinois:

A carpenter forgot to remove the $800, his life's savings, which he had pinned to his shirt before sending it to a Chinese laundry. When he went to ask for it, the Chinaman only said, "No savvy."

From Missouri:

A trusting woman selected the family Bible as a hiding place for $40. When she returned from an absence, she found that burglars had visited her home and the money was gone.

The general idea of the deposit of savings with post offices for safe-keeping seems to have originated in England in 1807, and was finally adopted and made operative in that country in 1861. Upon the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, the man who proposed the plan adopted in 1861—a Mr. Charles W. Sikes—was knighted in recognition of his services to the nation. The plan in England was a success immediately.

In the United States the original suggestion for the establishment of such a plan seems to have been made by a patron of the post office at Pittsburgh, Pa., to the postmaster at that place, then Mr. S. V. von Bonnhorst. This suggestion was transmitted by that postmaster to Mr. A. N. Zevely, who was then the Third Assistant Postmaster General, in a letter dated December 20, 1861.

During the next 10 years the increasing demand for such depositories gained considerable strength and the plan was recommended to Congress by Postmaster General John A. J. Creswell in 1871 during the Presidency of Ulysses S. Grant.

The enactment of appropriate postal savings laws was subsequently advocated by eight Postmasters General and by Presidents Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft. The idea was also advocated in the political campaign of 1908 in the platforms of both the Republican and the Democratic Parties.

The very first bill introduced in Congress upon the subject apparently was a bill introduced on December 18, 1873, during the first session of the Forty-third Congress by Hon. Horace Maynard, a Representative from Tennessee. This was an exhaustive bill covering about 18 pages in the printed form, but the Committee on Banking and Currency made an adverse report on the bill and nothing was done with it.

About 80 bills were introduced in succeeding Congresses between 1873 and 1910 relating to the establishment of facilities for postal-savings deposits by the public, and approval by the press and the public was expressed in increasing degree from year to year until the latter year.

During the Sixty-first Congress, following the political campaign of 1908, in which both major parties advocated postal-savings legislation, Senator Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, introduced a Senate bill which, after passage by both the Senate and the House of Representatives as a nonpartisan measure, was approved by President William Howard Taft on June 25, 1910.

Thus, after an agitation which was carried on for about 50 years, Congress enacted a measure which provided a means whereby savings of the people could be deposited for safe-keeping and interest earning in designated post offices of the country. In that legislative act confidence was a corner-stone incentive by which deposits were encouraged, for which Congress provided that "the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payments of the deposits made in postal-savings depository offices." This fundamental provision remains to-day unchanged on the statute books in its original form.

In the legislative act a board of trustees was designated to administer the postal-savings transactions. This board consisted of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General, all of whom were to serve ex officio, and the board was authorized to designate such post offices as it might select to become postal-savings depositories.

The Postal Savings System did not actually get into operation until January, 1911, but in his annual report to Congress for the year ending June 30, 1911, the Postmaster General, Mr. Frank H. Hitchcock, stated:

An important event of the year was the successful organization of the Postal Savings System. On January 3, 1911, depositories were opened experimentally at a single post office in each one of the 48 States and Territories. After a careful test for four months at these offices the system was rapidly extended.

Later he stated in this same annual report:

Postal-savings deposits have kept pace with the extension of the system. Amounting at the end of the first month to only $60,252 in the 48 experimental offices, they increased in a half year to $679,310, and now, after 11 months of operation, have reached a total of $11,000,000.

It is interesting to note that during the period from January 1, 1930, to June 30, 1930, there was deposited over one hundred and four times as much as was deposited during the period from January 3, 1911, to June 30, 1911. This tremendous increase in volume of new deposits attracted to the Postal Savings System certainly indicates a healthy attitude on the part of the public toward their Postal Savings System after only 20 years operation in this country.

The Director of the Postal Savings System, Mr. W. T. S. Rollins, has grown old in the service. He is a genial, intelligent, and able official. Through his hands have streamed millions of savings without the loss of a penny. In fact, he has kept the money wisely and safely invested, all to the advantage of the patrons of the system. When asked where the volume of new depositors come from and whether the system competes with existing banking institutions, he replied that, far from competing with the existing banks, he redeposits in those banks the money that the frightened citizenry withdraws from them. Rollins is ably assisted by William N. Pearson as assistant director. Both are splendidly guided by Third Assistant Postmaster General Frederic A. Tilton.

While banks were failing all over the country and a veritable avalanche of funds came out of other banks, it was the Postal Savings System that salvaged much of the money withdrawn by the frightened and the timid. The Postal Savings System operates primarily in the field of latent capital and unproductive wealth, since it operates with moneys beyond the reach of the business world. Through this distinctively American system dormant dollars are again placed in the channels of trade.

One interesting bit of information indicated in the annual report of the board of trustees for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, is that the regional slumps in the balance on deposit in the New England States, the Middle Atlantic States, the Mountain States, and the Territorial areas were influenced somewhat by immigration restrictions, since the savings of thrifty but distrustful aliens placed in the Postal Savings System had tended to stem the tide of millions of dollars flowing to foreign shores. This regional slump in the areas mentioned amounted to a total decrease of $1,626,318, which was also due somewhat to postwar conditions, higher interest rates in commercial fields, and other lesser factors. This decrease in the areas designated was more than offset by the increase which was recorded in other areas of the country.

At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, postal-savings funds which had been intrusted by the public to post-office depositories had been placed in the marts of trade through redeposit, under the safeguards required by the postal savings act, in 4,175 banks. Of these, 2,818 were national banks and 1,357 were State banks or banks under State supervision. These banks, for the purpose of security for the use of these postal-savings funds, had pledged to the Department of the Treasury acceptable bonds, as required by the postal savings act, the value of which equaled or ex-

The Postal Savings System showed a net profit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, of $135,862.92, after there had been deducted departmental and Postal Service expenses amounting to $1,426,243.92.

FACTS CONCERNING THE HUNGER MARCH ON THE NATIONAL CAPITAL ON THE OPENING OF CONGRESS

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield for me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks made by me over the radio last Saturday night.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. At the beginning of the proceedings of a new session we have fallen into the practice of gentlemen going down into the well of the House to present personal requests and things like that. The general membership of the House can not hear them. I trust the Speaker will enforce the rule by requesting gentlemen, when making these requests, to stand back in the body of the Hall so that the membership can hear what is going on.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a wise suggestion.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair make a few remarks concerning that? It is the opinion of the Chair that the practice of coming down into the well of the House in order to attract the attention of the Chair is improper. It tends to confusion. It does not give the membership in the rear of the Hall opportunity to hear the requests. So the Chair thinks he will adopt the practice of not recognizing gentlemen who seek recognition from the well of the House. The Chair thinks this will finally stop the practice.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks made by me over the radio last Saturday night:

Fellow Americans, I intend to divide my remarks this evening into three parts: First, a discussion of the hunger march, its origin, and purposes; second, a brief statement of the principles and aims of the communists in the United States; and third, I will offer what I consider as constructive suggestions, to furnish work for the unemployed and provide foodstuffs and necessities for the hungry and needy unemployed citizens during this world-wide depression.

There is nothing new in a hunger march on Washington. Back in 1894 General Coxey, now mayor of Massillon, Ohio, led an army of unemployed to the National Capital to demand a Government bond issue of $500,000,000 to provide work for the unemployed on roads and other public construction. Coxey's Army, so called, was composed of American citizens seeking work for the unemployed and did not advocate the destruction of our economic system or the overthrow of our republican form of government.

The national hunger march, converging on Washington from a number of the large industrial centers of the country and expected to concentrate at Washington on Monday, is entirely different in composition and purpose from any of the hunger marches of the past. The present army was organized by the communists and led by communists, and does not represent the unemployed American wage earners or their welfare. It is a communist gesture aimed to stir up dissatisfaction with our economic system and form of government, and arouse a revolutionary spirit among the unemployed.

It is a typical communist gathering, composed of revolutionary agitators, both black and white, who care nothing about affording actual relief to the unemployed, but seek to exploit the suffering and misery among our needy unemployed citizens for communist and revolutionary purposes. It should be clearly understood that the whole hunger march from beginning to end is communist-organized and probably inspired or directly ordered by the Communist Internationale at Moscow.

Mr. William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, told me personally and most emphatically only yesterday that the American Federation of Labor repudiated any connection whatever with the hunger march or its purposes.

The fact is that a very high percentage of the marchers or truck paraders are either members of the Communist Party or in sympathy with the communist principles. The various communist district organizers in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, New York, and Philadelphia have been busy for the past two months making preparations for the hunger march and enlisting as many as possible of the local communists to join in the big motor-truck parade on the National Capital.

My main purpose in accepting the invitation to speak over radio station WJSV is to make clear to the American people that the national hunger march is a communist demonstration, and not in the interest of American labor. There may be a few misguided or uninformed unemployed that have been duped into joining the big parade without knowledge of its communistic aims, but even those could not stay with it for many hours without finding out its main purpose is to sow seeds of class hatred, atheism, and world revolution.

The communists are the most skilled propagandists in the world, and seize on every opportunity for mass demonstrations against existing institutions and governments. It is safe to say that in the entire army of truck marchers there will be few, if any, other than communists, radical socialists, or extreme radicals who hate our traditions, our ideals, our principles of government, and the American flag, and seek the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence. It consists of the same group, but on a much larger scale, as the communist demonstration held at the opening of the last Congress, under the fictitious head of "National Conference for the Protection of the Foreign Born."

The actual organizers of the converging communists, under the camouflage of national hunger marchers, are the Communist Party of the United States, and three of its strongest auxiliaries, the Trade Union Unity League, Workers International Relief, and the International Labor Defense League, all communist led and organized, and communist to the core.

The demands of the communist hunger marchers are purposely made so extravagant that no Member of Congress would consider even introducing such proposals, such as unemployment insurance to jobless workers equal to their full pay during the entire period of unemployment.

The fact is that the communists are not interested in unemployment relief, but seek to discredit President Hoover's organization for unemployment relief, and the anticipated efforts of the Congress to provide work by additional Government construction and foodstuffs if private charity and municipal and State aid fails.

If the communist hunger marchers are sincere, and want to accomplish results for the needy unemployed in America, let them cease their extravagant, impossible, and revolutionary demands and get behind a $2,000,000,000 bond issue for roads, waterways, Federal buildings, and other public works. American labor is not asking for charity or unemployment insurance, but for a job and the right to work and earn a living at substantial wages. There are no more loyal or patriotic citizens in the United States than the free American wage earners, and they have no use for communism, revolutionary radicalism, or any form of foreign dictatorship, under which they would lose their civil rights and liberties and become disfranchised slaves to an autocratic and tyrannical government.

The committee of the House of Representatives to investigate communist propaganda and activities in the United States, of which I was chairman, reached the conclusion that there were between five and six hundred thousand communists or communist sympathizers in the United States; and that two-thirds were aliens, 20 per cent naturalized citizens and about 10 per cent native-born citizens, black or white.

The so-called communist hunger marchers will contain a large percentage of foreign born, who will be most vociferous in their assaults upon our economic system, the Congress, and the President of the United States. If these alien communists do not like our ways of doing things, our laws, our free institutions, and our form of government, let them go back home where they can enjoy the oppressive laws, the pitiful wage scale, and the lack of freedom of speech that they have been accustomed to in the past in their native countries. But if they insist on continuing to spew forth hatred of our ideals, traditions, principles of government, and urge the overthrow of our form of government by force and violence, then they should be deported from the United States.

These alien communists are not afraid of our police, courts, or jails; the only thing that they are afraid of is to be deported back home. The Department of Labor will be presented with a made-to-order opportunity to find out how many of these alien communists paraders have entered the United States illegally. All those who are here in violation of the law should be deported, and any of those aliens who advocate violence, in violation of existing law, should also be arrested and promptly deported.

I want to take this occasion to earnestly appeal to the sound common sense of all American citizens, and particularly to members of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, not to provoke disturbances or interfere with the constitutional rights of American citizens to freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, and of petition. No matter how drastically we may disagree with communist doctrines, nothing would help their cause more than to make martyrs of them and give them the publicity they seek by refusing them their constitutional rights. It is most important that they be not interfered with or attacked, and that they be given adequate police protection.

If they are afforded an opportunity to blow off steam and make their ridiculous demands upon Congress, the whole communist demonstration will degenerate into a complete fiasco; but if either beaten up by the police or the citizens, it would tend to create sympathy where none exists and give undeserved publicity to a handful of communist marchers.

The police of the city of Washington and the Capitol police are adequate to preserve order and to handle a thousand communists, and should refrain from using force or violence, unless compelled to by overt acts of the communists themselves. Open violence on the part of the communists will, of course, be met with violence on the part of the officers of the law, whose duty is to uphold law and order, and in doing so will be upheld by the American people.

My advice, however, is to give the communists ample opportunity to walk and talk themselves out and to allow them to present a petition to both branches of the Congress without molestation, unless they insist on violating existing laws and regulations or resort to violence in the first instance.

I know that there are many legionnaires just spoiling for a good fight, and to those I appeal for restraint and not to help the communist paraders by creating either sympathy or publicity for them. Let us give them all the rights which in their own country they would not accord to their opponents.

I am not an alarmist, and do not anticipate a revolution from the communists in the United States to-morrow at dawn, the next day, or the next year. The Regular Army, the National Guard, American Legion, and Veterans of Foreign Wars could, using a Russian word, "liquidate" all the communists in the United States in a few weeks time if they should start a revolution in this country. They will not make any such attempt, as they know what would happen to them, and they are far too skilled as propagandists to destroy themselves without any chance of success.

The following are extracts from the Daily Worker, the central organ of the Communist Party of the United States: "The national hunger march continues according to schedule, with all four columns moving from point to point like a military maneuver, etc. * * * The Daily Worker has succeeded in reaching enough workers so that the masses in towns all over the United States are rallying to the national hunger march."

Column 1 is composed of communist delegates from New England, Boston, Providence, New Haven, and New York; Column 2 is from Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Binghamton, and Scranton. These two columns join at Philadelphia. Column 3, from Chicago, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, and Youngstown, and column 4, which is the smallest, with about 60 delegates, from the Far West, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, and Columbus, join at Pittsburgh. Probably not more than 1,000 communist delegates will assemble at their proposed conference in Washington to-morrow evening to elect a committee to present their demands to the Congress and to the President on Monday afternoon.

Herbert Benjamin, the national field organizer of the Washington arrangements committee for the national hunger march, is also a field secretary out of New York City for the Workers' International Relief, a branch of the Communist or Red Internationale of Labor Unions, with headquarters at Moscow. There is no question but that he is one of the active leaders in the communist movement in the United States, and like all other communist leaders takes his orders from Moscow and apparently glories in it.

In view of the proposed demands by the communist hunger marchers upon Congress, I believe the time is opportune for the American people to make their views known to the Congress and urge the enactment by the new Congress of proper legislation to combat the spread of communism in the United States.

I would suggest that those radio listeners who are interested in this issue, which is one of the most important and far reaching affecting the civilization of the world, should write to their Members of Congress for House Report No. 2290, containing in less than a hundred pages the report and recommendations of the House committee appointed to investigate communist activities and propaganda in the United States, which is interesting and gives a complete and concise report on communism.

Among the principle recommendations are the following, which I hope the radio audience will support by letters and resolutions to their respective Representatives and Senators in the Congress.

1. Enlarging the authority of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, for the purpose of investigating and keeping in constant touch with the revolutionary propaganda and activities of the communists in the United States.

2. Strengthening the immigration laws to prevent the admission of communists into the United States, and providing for the immediate deportation of all alien communists.

3. Enforcement of the provisions of the tariff act of 1930, section 307, prohibiting the importation of goods produced or manufactured in part or in whole by forced labor.

This last recommendation aims to protect free American labor from ruinous competition with the forced labor in Soviet Russia, paid 20 cents a day.

The House committee was convinced that the surest and most effective way of combating the spread of communism in the United States is to give the fullest possible publicity to the fundamental principles and aims of communists, which are the same throughout the world, as they are not likely to prove acceptable to any considerable number of American citizens, unless camouflaged by other extraneous issues such as protection for the foreign born or unemployment insurance.

The political and economic aims of the communists in Moscow, Berlin, Paris, London, New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Tokyo, and Pekin are the same, and all take their orders from the Communist Internationale, with headquarters at Moscow, and obey them implicitly and are apparently proud of giving allegiance to the red flag and the Soviet Union.

The following is a definition of communism, a world-wide political organization advocating: (1) Hatred of God and of all religious beliefs; (2) destruction of private property and inheritance; (3) promotion of the bitterest kind of class hatred; (4) using the Communist Internationale to stir up revolutionary propaganda and incite strikes, riots, sabotage, and industrial unrest; (5) destruction of all civil rights and liberties, such as freedom of speech, of the press, and of assembly, and the promotion of class or civil war; and (6) in order to attain the ultimate and final objective by means of the establishment of a dictatorship of the proletariat with a soviet form of government and a world capital at Moscow.

The answer to the communist hunger marchers and other communists is that the Federal Government does not propose to let American citizens starve in case of failure of private charity, whether it costs $50,000,000 or $500,000,000, to provide foodstuffs for the needy unemployed. We are the richest nation in the world and have an overabundance of wheat, coal, oil, and lumber, and will see to it that American citizens neither starve nor freeze during this period of world-wide depression. However, every citizen has a clear-cut duty to give according to his means, and to give until it hurts, if necessary, to relieve the distress and starvation among our people. There is more truth than fiction in the old proverb that charity begins at home.

It is true that we are in the midst of a world-wide depression which affects millions of American wage earners and causes distress and dread throughout the land. It is an appalling and almost inconceivable fact that there are 5,000,000 unemployed in the United States, with the probability that there will be several additional millions before the winter is over. Those unemployed must be assured that no member of their family will be permitted to starve or suffer from the rigors of our climate during the winter months in this country of ours with an overabundance of wheat and other foodstuffs. We must destroy the fear of insecurity by serving notice definitely and conclusively, no matter what the cost may be, that an ample supply of foodstuffs will be furnished all unemployed American wage earners during this emergency.

In the last session of Congress I introduced a resolution that wheat held in storage by the Federal Government should be turned over to the Red Cross to be processed into flour and distributed by the various charitable organizations throughout the United States. The Federal Stabilization Board owns 200,000,000 bushels of wheat, and all of this, if necessary, should be made available to the Red Cross without delay.

It is the prime function of the Government to provide for the safety, happiness, and security of its people. I have no patience with any other philosophy of government, or any attempt to hide behind the Federal Constitution. If private charity is not sufficient to carry the burden and provide for the hungry and clothe and house the destitute, then it is clearly the duty of the Federal, State, and municipal governments to contribute their full share and assume their proper responsibilities. Failure of the Federal Government in this crisis not to exact its utmost efforts to help relieve the suffering and misery would be a fatal indictment against the administration at Washington, and even against our republican form of government, and would be the beginning of the end of capitalism.

I am opposed to the unemployment dole, which tends to destroy individual incentive, which has been the main cause of the wonderful development of the United States. The financial dole has wrought ruin and disaster to the economic stability of Germany and England.

The appropriation of $500,000,000 by the last Congress for public buildings was a step in the right direction, but it should be trebled by the Congress that meets on Monday. An additional billion or more dollars should be made available immediately for the construction of highways, public buildings, and waterways, and other needed improvements and public works.

Labor is not asking for a dole but an opportunity to work. This opportunity must be afforded, even if it takes a $2,000,000,000 bond issue. There can be no return to prosperity in the United States until labor is employed at substantial wages and has a buying power commensurate with their needs. Prosperity can not be obtained by decrees or resolutions. The big issue in the United States to-day is the ways and means of providing jobs for the 5,000,000 unemployed. Charity is not the answer, but work is, and it must be provided by the Federal, State, and municipal governments.

Let us have faith in America and in the capacity, intelligence, and patriotism of our people and our Government to solve all our economic problems as they have in the past, for the best interests and welfare of the American people, free from communism, socialism, or Fascism. Let us have faith in ourselves and in our democratic institutions. For the past 50 years our wage earners have been the best paid, the best housed, the best fed, the best clothed, and the most contented in the world. The Congress and the various State legislatures for many years have been correcting abuses that have crept into our economic system by enactment of laws governing the conditions and hours of labor, passing employers liability laws, and now providing old-age pensions. Civilization is confronted with the solution of economic problems far more serious than at any time since we obtained our independence as a nation. I wholeheartedly commend the declaration of the Pope in behalf of social and industrial justice, and in favor of a more equitable distribution of wealth. It is our manifest duty to see that industrial justice and human rights prevail in these United States. If our country is worth dying for in time of war, it must be worth living for in time of peace.

When the Declaration of Independence was written by Thomas Jefferson there were few, if any, republics in the world. Rule by the divine right of kings was the accepted form of government.

A representative system of government, based on the consent of the governed, was a new departure and regarded as revolutionary. Even when Lincoln made his immortal Gettysburg speech that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth, there were still few republics in the world. Since then monarchies have been toppling over right and left, and republics have come into being, based on our principles of government.

Nevertheless, communists, socialists, pink intellectuals, radical college professors, and a smattering of Protestant ministers have combined to denounce our economic system as being antiquated and loaded down with abuses and evils, and that our Government is corrupt and democracy a failure. These visionaries, without any experience in business or government, find everything wrong in America and everything beautiful in Soviet Russia, or in some form of temporary foreign dictatorship.

Let us rededicate ourselves to the proposition that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from this earth. Let us reaffirm our belief in our republican form of government, because it is the soundest, fairest, most honorable, and best form of government ever devised by the mind of man. Let us cherish it and defend it against all our enemies both from within and without, and serve notice that we do not propose to substitute communism, socialism, or Fascism for our republican form of government, which is the best on earth.

HON. PETER J. DOOLING

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a short address I made with reference to the work and life of a former Member of this House, my predecessor, Peter J. Dooling.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it is my sad duty to announce the death on October 18, 1931, in New York City, of a distinguished former Member of the House, the Hon. Peter J. Dooling. Congressman Dooling preceded me in representing the fifteenth congressional district of New York.

He was born in the city of New York and educated in its public schools. At an early age he took an active interest in public affairs, and affiliated himself with the Democratic Party. As a very young man he was appointed chairman of the county committee in his assembly district. This position he held during his entire life, and at the time of his death he was also chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic Party in the county of New York.

His native city early recognized his ability as an organizer and executive. As a reward for the services he rendered his party he was chosen for public honors. He was appointed court officer in the court of general sessions, serving from January 1, 1887, to December 1, 1889. Elected a member of the board of aldermen of New York City, serving from January 1, 1891, to December 31, 1892. Appointed deputy clerk of the court of special sessions, serving from April 15, 1893, to June 30, 1895. Appointed commissioner of the aqueduct commission and served from January 4, 1898, to May 18, 1898. Appointed deputy commissioner of the department of water supply, gas, and electricity. Served from May 9, 1898, to December 31, 1901. Elected to the Senate of the State of New York and served from January 1, 1903 to December 31, 1905. Elected county clerk of the county of New York and served from January 1, 1906, to December 31, 1909.

He was elected Representative in Congress from the fifteenth congressional district of New York in November, 1912, and served in the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and Sixty-sixth Congresses. During his term of service in the House he was a member of the following committees: Expenditures in the War Department, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and the Committee on Insular Affairs.

In the Sixty-fifth Congress he was appointed chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. In the Sixty-third Congress he was appointed on a committee by the Speaker to attend the memorial exercises at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in honor of the men of the Navy and Marine Corps who lost their lives at Vera Cruz, Mexico.

During his entire congressional service he took a particular and personal interest in bettering the condition of Federal employees. He worked indefatigably for the reclassification act for postal employees, the increase of their compensation, and the betterment of their general working conditions.

At the end of his congressional service he was appointed sheriff of New York County by Governor Smith, serving from January 1, 1924, to December 31, 1924. On January 1, 1926, Mayor Walker appointed him commissioner of purchase and he served in that capacity until his death, October 18, 1931.

During his whole public service, extending over a period of 44 years, he was ever zealous to help his fellow man. In fact, the greatest memorial that he leaves behind him is the kind remembrance in the hearts of the men, women, and children of the city of New York of the services he rendered them. Too often kind deeds performed by public men are soon forgotten, but our friend always felt that somewhere or somehow compensation would come as a reward for his years of toil and service for others.

His was a generous nature, making the misfortune of others his very own, and by his helping hand removing their cares and distress. There is no doubt that the record of his works has been written on an imperishable scroll, the summation of which is that he was charitable; that he was kind; that he was generous. The world is better because he lived, for his deeds and the good example he gave and the lesson of his life will live on, and in the days to come will serve as a model which youth may well strive to emulate.

Peace and death's beauty to his heart to-day,
Who is not dead, but only gone away
To sleep a little, as a child who goes,
When twilight folds the petal of the rose.

NOMINATION OF HON. JOHN N. GARNER FOR SPEAKER

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague [Mr. SUMNERS of Texas] placing in nomination before the Democratic caucus the name of Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas, before the Democratic caucus, nominating Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas, for the Speakership. The address is as follows:

Mr. Chairman and members of the Democratic caucus, two and three-quarters years ago we met in this Chamber for the purpose of effecting party organization for the last Congress. We numbered only 165 Democrats. The Republicans had elected 266 members. We had met one of the most disastrous defeats in our party history. On that occasion we chose the Hon. JOHN N. GARNER to be our leader and our candidate for Speaker. We were then at the beginning of Mr. Hoover's administration, the last of the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover triumvirate to occupy the Presidency. That triumviate had been placed in power 13 years ago, Mr. Harding as President, Mr. Coolidge as Vice President, and Mr. Hoover a member of the Cabinet. I shall not mention the remainder of the Cabinet. Some are with us yet. Some have gone one place and some another.

Upon the death of Mr. Harding, Mr. Coolidge was moved from the Vice Presidency into the Presidency, first by the Constitution and then by election. Mr. Coolidge did not choose to run and Mr. Hoover was promoted from the Cabinet to the Presidency. He had been elected by a tremendous electoral and popular majority. The fate of the Democratic Party in no small degree rested upon those 165 men and women constituting the small Democratic minority who were then assembled in this Chamber. They were not unmindful of their responsibility. They were not unmindful of the peril to the country, which they felt was involved in the continuation of the policies which had begun with the Harding administration, continued without interruption, and would probably continue during the Hoover administration. There was no levity on that occasion. It was a serious hour. Already the buying power of agriculture was becoming paralyzed. That fact carried an ominous threat to the whole economic structure, which selfish interest was too blind to see and the party in power either too subservient or too incompetent to deal with. May I quote from what was said on that occasion. To stand now where we stood then and look down the intervening time should help to bring back the sense of duty and renew the strong purpose which was ours then and which inspired us during the Congress to do battle, hopelessly in the minority though we were, for what we conceived to be the interest of the people in the country. On that occasion it was said:

"Whether the Democratic Party shall come again to power depends upon whether in this time of as great need as this Nation ever had it can and will respond with a vigilant, aggressive, courageous party organization, following in solidarity a wise and effective leadership, in the protection of the rights and opportunities of the average man, and in the protection of legitimate private interests against the inevitable consequences of the abusive exercise of the power, financial and political, of great groups which now dominate in this country.

"With a rapidity unequaled in the economic and governmental history of the world we are moving toward those conditions and positions from which heretofore those who have moved without exception have been driven back in disastrous defeat."

The great Republican majority would not be warned, not by my words on that occasion but by the lessons of history. We have reached now the destination toward which their policies have given direction and now they can not even offer security to the great combinations of political and economic power whose every wish has been their will. In blind subservience they have brought these interests to the brink with every sort of economic danger in front and every sort of political danger threatening them from the rear. While that is their position millions of people walk hungry and unemployed in the midst of as bountiful a contribution as nature can make toward the happiness and contentment of a people. In the midst of this confusion wrought during the past 13 years and rising above the din of crashing fortunes are the questions, Can we preserve a democracy in government if we destroy democracy in opportunity? Can we preserve political liberty if we destroy economic freedom? Will this modern feudalism in business and industry fostered during these 13 years not bring to us results comparable to those which in the history of our ancestors were incident to the establishment of the old feudalism?

These are not idle questions. The rapidity with which the little men—the yeomanry of business and of industry, the independent farmer, and the workingman—who want to live as free men have a right to live and are willing to let others live free men have a right to live, the rapidity with which they are being driven out or subjugated can not fail to arouse the apprehensive attention of all thoughtful people.

The idea that prosperity comes from above is absurd. The idea that we can have economic stability, much less a free government, with a few great economic overlords to whom the masses of the people owe economic and political fealty is absurd. Yet that very condition has been developing in this country during the past 13 years with the acquiescence, if not with the actual encouragement, of those who have controlled the policies of the party in power.

No country can prosper or can escape punishment when in its fundamental policies it violates the basic natural laws which govern human society. The development of human beings is more important in the scheme of nature than is the development of business.

The average man must have a champion of his rights. The public interest requires it; the public safety requires it; the preservation of our institutions requires it. That champion will be either the Democratic Party, conservatively progressive, which while protecting the legitimate rights of private property will hold pride and greed and thirst for power within safe bounds, safe for the opportunity and economic liberty of the people; or the people, goaded to desperation and made irresponsible by the loss of responsibility, with their ballots will seize the powers of government and with those powers will break through the barriers erected to protect special interests and sweep on far beyond, leav- widespread chaos in the wake. That is not a prophecy; it is not an opinion expressed—it is a statement of that which is historically established as the consequences which flow naturally and inevitably out of such a condition from such a cause.

The teachers in the new school of economic philosophy guiding the present administration and opposing the Democratic Party which stands in the middle position will not be able, when the inevitable reaction comes, to protect those whom it is now guiding to their destruction.

The Democratic Party is friend to the legitimate interest of private property, great or small, but it does not yield the right to make economically unfree the people of a great nation.

The Democratic Party would protect the legitimate interest of private property against the folly of these economic leaders, who are bringing the whole structure into danger.

At such a time and in such a situation, the Nation's interest, the security of private property, and the economic safety and political peace of the people challenge the Democratic Party to the greatest possible solidarity, to the greatest possible contribution of real statesmanship, and to produce its wisest leadership. Mr. Chairman, in response to that challenge by authority and direction of the Texas delegation, I nominate for selection as your candidate for Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-second Congress our great leader, the Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the President's message that the time of debate shall be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the President's message.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the President's message, with Mr. LOZIER in the chair.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I hold that in a time such as this it is in accordance with the principles both of humanitarianism and of sound public policy that we should adopt as a slogan, "No honest American should be allowed to starve." [Applause.]

A year ago I introduced a bill providing for direct Federal relief for those in acute distress. It is not worth while to recount much of what subsequently transpired upon that subject. The President predicted that the depression would be over by the middle of 1931 and that any measures for relief should be limited to that time. The National Red Cross declined to administer any funds which might be appropriated for the purpose, and probably between one and the other the majority of the people of the country became convinced that such a measure was unnecessary. The bill was not passed.

A year has gone. Millions of our fellow citizens continue to walk the streets of our industrial cities without employment. In millions of American homes the shadow of starvation and despair looms darker than even a year ago. I have returned with a measure similar to that which I offered last year. Again I have offered a bill for direct Government aid for those who may be in distress. The bill authorizes an appropriation of $100,000,000 for administration by the President, and provides that he may disburse it either in the form of food or of money, may cooperate with States and communities, may utilize existing organizations, and may create additional organizations as he may desire in its administration, and may disburse it either by gifts or by loans to those in need. In short, the bill gives the President the widest latitude in the administration of this fund.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE CLEAR IN ONE RESPECT

I heard the reading of the President's message on yesterday with deep disappointment but not with much surprise. In many respects I found it most confusing and muddy. In one particular I found the message distressingly clear. It was the pronouncement upon Federal relief for those in distress. He declared explicitly in opposition to direct or indirect Government aid. Whatever may be said of the President's lack of clarity and lack of purpose and of plan, no one can criticize the definiteness of his expression upon that subject. The President's message may be uncertain in other respects, but one thing is certain, and that is he is determined that none of the funds of the Federal Government shall be used in the relief of the multitude of our fellow citizens who are starving.

This is an attitude which the President holds toward the individual only. He has no such opposition to aid for distressed business of any kind. He would aid agriculture. He would aid the railroads. He would give a dole to the holders of real-estate securities. He would come to the rescue of banks having frozen credits. He would use public funds to relieve industry and business generally. I think we may fairly say of all kinds of businesses that in the President they have a friend who is willing to use for their relief and rehabilitation the vast powers of the Federal Government and the resources of the Federal Treasury. He is even willing to aid the peoples of foreign countries. He has granted a moratorium to Germany, an action which will inevitably lead eventually to the cancellation of our European debts of some twelve billions.

MILLIONS FOR DISTRESSED BUSINESS, NOT A CENT FOR THE STARVING

With hundreds of millions the President would come to the rescue of the bondholders of the land banks, to the succor of the commercial banks, to the support of the railroads, and to the aid of industry of one kind and another. To these interests he would open the Treasury, but to starving men, women, and children he would not give a red cent. [Applause.]

I thank the President for his definition of a "dole." The dictionaries are all wrong; at last he has set us right. At last we know what a "dole" is. Last year his message left us in uncertainty. Then his impression seemed to be that any form of governmental aid is a dole, and that it was within the exclusive province of private charity to relieve distress. He has now receded from that position. He is now perfectly willing that the States, counties, and municipalities may use public funds for the distressed, and that kind of relief, he says, is not a dole. It is only when you take money out of the United States Treasury that it becomes a "dole." It is a "dole" only when granted to the hungry and not when given to banks, industries, and business in distress. This is presidential logic in 1931.

I am happy to be able to find one expression in the President's message with which I can agree. He pays a compliment to the spirit of the people. They have, indeed, been patient. They have met their responsibilities as citizens with a high degree of devotion. The rich, generally speaking, have met their responsibilities. Many of them, with incomes decimated to the vanishing point, have contributed with liberality to public charity. Here I pay a tribute to the wealthier classes in my own city for the splendid manner in which they have responded.

The rich have met their responsibilities. They have contributed liberally to charitable causes. The poor have been patient. Oh, amazing has been their patience in the hour of their suffering. Men have walked the streets naked to the elements and hungry, and knowing that their families were at home suffering for food. They have had too much pride and self-respect to call upon their fellow citizens for private charity. They have faced it out. They have endured it with fortitude. There has been little disorder, practically no pillaging, and small expression of political discontent.

WAR AGAINST STARVATION AND DESPAIR

Our country is at war, an awful war, a war as appalling and involving as much suffering as any war this country has ever engaged in. This war is not against a foreign foe but against a domestic enemy. That enemy is starvation, ruin, and despair. These brave soldiers in this war have borne themselves with fidelity and patriotism, and with a devotion which might well compare with the heroism of any soldier who ever fell upon his country's battlefield. [Applause.]

We had a demonstration here the other day by a few misguided radicals, the hunger marchers. They were not in the least representative of the great body of the American people. They did not speak for them. Gentlemen sometimes stand before the House and raise the bugaboo of the red flag. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that there has never been a finer proof of the soundness in principle of the average American heart and of patriotism and devotion to the principles of American government and of individualism than our people have shown during the past 12 months. [Applause.]

If there be those so timorous and so lacking in confidence in their fellow citizens that they have feared for American institutions, let them be reassured. America will not go communist. America will not be driven, even by starvation, to go communist. [Applause.]

NEW FAITH IN INDIVIDUALISM

The thoughtful American sees in the present situation added proof of the validity of the system of individualism. His faith is higher to-day than ever before. He recognizes that the ills from which we suffer are not inherent in our economic system. He knows that the evils which afflict us are due not to any fault in our system but to abuses of our system. He recognizes in this situation that we are reaping the harvest of the collectivism which you gentlemen of the Republican side of the aisle have sown with your special group favors and group discriminations; your collectivism of the protective system and of aid to agriculture upon the specious theory that as you prefer a special group some of the benefit will leak down and inure to the common advantage; with your collectivism of subsidies to shipping and aviation which you have granted, and so through all your policies.

Now we gather the fruit of your false philosophy. Now the harvest is ripe. It is a harvest of suffering from the abuse of individualism and of the cankers and excresences which you have fostered upon it. [Applause.]

The thoughtful American would not try to remedy this situation by rushing on to rash experiments in a new and more radical collectivism. He would return rather to the purity of individualism, in which there should be some real chance for private initiative and for individual effort upon a fairly equal basis. [Applause.] He would destroy the monopolies which you have fostered. He would strike down the trade barriers which you have built up. He would scatter by lawful and legitimate means the vast concentrations of wealth which it has been your pride to encourage. He would return to a time when real individualism and real democracy would have opportunity.

NO INCREASE IN PUBLIC WORKS

The President is firm in his position that the Federal Government should do nothing for the benefit of the poor and suffering. He even seems now to have gone back upon his former idea that some of the slack should be taken up by a system of public works. I listened to his message attentively. I was unable to find in it anything which encouraged me to believe that the President would approve liberal appropriations for public works. He refers to what has been done during the past year, and says—

> That expenditures on these works during this calendar year will reach about $780,000,000.

He also says that—

> Through this increased construction and through the maintenance of a full complement of Federal employees, and through services to veterans, it is estimated that the Federal taxpayer is now directly contributing to the livelihood of 10,000,000 of our citizens.

The implication is strong that he does not favor any increase; that he is not willing to embark on any new projects; that he purposes to confine public works to the projects which have already been started.

Following what I have just read from the message I find a sentence that gives me some pause. He says:

> We must avoid burdens upon the Government which will create more unemployment in private industry than can be gained by further expansion of employment by the Federal Government.

I am just a plain, blunt man and not highly literate, so it is small wonder that I was unable to gather any sense out of that sentence. [Laughter.] But I have asked some of my friends who have more acquaintance with language and languages, and find that they are as hopelessly hobbled as I am. Frankly, I do not know what it means. It looks to me like he comes out of the same hole that he went in and that it does not mean anything. [Laughter.]

HOW MAY ABSENTEE OWNERS BE CALLED TO DUTY

The President insists that the Federal Government owes no duty to those who are suffering for food. Then I ask, How are communities which have been exploited by those who reside in distant States, and who have derived the profits out of the labor and resources of such communities—how are they to get at these absentee owners and make them do their duty by their idle workers whom they have abandoned to starvation? [Applause.]

I do not know any better illustration of what I am talking about than the situation in my home city. I live in an industrial city of some 260,000 population. The employment situation there is unspeakably bad. In February last the charitable organizations of my city fed about 25,000 people. In July of this year they fed between 12,000 and 13,000 of our people. The other day our city administration decided, as a matter of unemployment relief, they would dig a little canal out of some funds which they could use for that purpose. They advertised for 750 laborers at $2 a day to do the work of digging—dirty drudgery and hard labor—and over 12,000 men registered for these $2-a-day jobs.

RELIEF FOR BIRMINGHAM'S DISTRESSED

My city is an industrial city. A great part of the wealth which is originated there is siphoned into distant communities and is appropriated by stockholders and bondholders who live in distant financial centers. Ours is a young city in which there is very little accumulated capital. This fall we set about raising a community fund. We set our goal at $700,000. It was a high goal. Conditions were so bad that few believed that we could reach it. I am proud to tell you that we reached our objective and went over it and secured subscriptions for $750,000. [Applause.]

But even that considerable sum will go only a little way toward taking care of those who are suffering. Those who were able to give gave until it hurt. They went down to the very bottoms of their pockets and contributed to the utmost. But what will $750,000 do toward feeding 25,000 to 40,000 starving people even for two or three months during the winter?

The charitable unit which disburses the part of this fund allocated to family relief has a schedule. They give from two and a half to four dollars a week to a family. Think of that. The average family consists of 4.3 persons. They have to live for a whole week on that pitiful sum, with nothing additional for rent, nothing for clothing, nor for fuel; it is barely enough to keep body and soul together.

Measured by our ability, we responded nobly—we subscribed up to the high-water mark of what we were able to do. You can not wonder, my friends, at my emotion, how deeply I am stirred by this situation. I am ashamed to discuss it in detail. I would leave something to your imagination.

The State is not in a situation to help. Uncle Sam can help, but the man at Uncle Sam's helm will not help. [Applause.] He hears our cry unmoved. Starving women and children appeal to him in vain, his answer is, "A dole for business, more time to pay for Germany, but not a cent for you."

PUTS AS GREAT BURDEN ON THE POOR AS ON THE RICH

It is a gross injustice to hold that each little locality should care for its own distressed, for it puts the same burden on the poorest community as on the richest—indeed, a much larger burden than it places on those of the rich community. Where the communities are poor those in need are much greater in proportion, and yet those who can give are fewer and are less able to respond.

I think also of the poorer rural communities, many of them without organization and without arrangements to care for those who may be in need. There nothing is to be done. Neither Government nor State nor county nor private charity is to come to the relief of those who are in want, and only the grim hand of death shall ease their sufferings.

I have told you of my own city and what a splendid sacrifice the people there have made; we are going to continue to make every sacrifice possible. We are going to do our best by our brethren who are starving, for we recognize them as our brethren.

But this point I can not fail to comment upon. In taking the collections for our chest the response which was made came from local parties, the absentee owners of numerous businesses from their offices in distant financial centers heard our pleas in vain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes more to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, our streets were full of those whom they had discharged from their jobs. They were full of those from whom these absentee owners had derived profits during the time of prosperity. They had siphoned the surplus out of our community, taken it away to spend it elsewhere, and now when the business ceased to be profitable they had closed up the doors, abandoned the enterprise, and thrown their employees upon public charity. We called upon them, we pleaded with them for help, and they gave us no favorable reply.

I CONDEMN NOT THE MEN BUT THEIR PRINCIPLES

I do not criticize them. It is not for me to criticize any man nor any concern for what they may give to charity. Each has his own peculiar problems; no man knows where the other man's shoe pinches. I am not condemning them. I do but condemn the principles of those in authority who are determined that we shall have no remedy against them. I call attention to this situation to indicate that there is no means by which you can get at these absentees for their fair share for the relief of the unemployed for whom they are responsible unless the Federal Government will interpose its strong arm and through a system of taxation take away some of their profits and return it to the care of those whom they have left starving.

I shall call attention to some of these concerns. My city is a big railroad center. Nine railroads come there, and it has been one of the most profitable centers for them in all the railroad world. It has now become unprofitable. Men have been thrown out of work by the thousands, out of the shops and off the trains. Yet these railroad systems have not contributed as much as one red copper for the relief of those whom they have thrown out of work.

Let us consider Mr. Gifford's company, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which owns the telegraph and the telephone systems which siphon out of my community every cent they can through the extortionate charges of a monopoly—Mr. Gifford, the President's choice, is head of the committee for relief of unemployment. Oh, these corporations can all say that they are public utilities and are not permitted to give their money for local relief. That is a good alibi for a soulless legal entity, the corporation, but it is not an alibi for Mr. Gifford.

It is no alibi for the men who own the stocks and bonds of these railroad companies and these telephone and telegraph monopolies. They are owned at a distance—in Chicago, New York, Baltimore, abroad—I do not know where, but I do know that we are too poor to own them there in my city.

These men living in distant communities no doubt with a fine glow of self-approval contribute to their local community chests. No doubt they do, and, as I said, I am not criticizing them, but not a single individual among all these absentees contributed as much as one cent to our community chest. They contribute perhaps to feed the unfortunate needy in their home communities, but they have left their own former employees in my city helpless and undone.

SOME CONCERNS WHICH FAILED TO HELP

Here is the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. with a business in my town. They did not give a cent. Here is the Garlock Packing Co. with a business there. They did not give a cent. Here is the Independent Pneumatic Tool Co. They did not give a cent. Here is the Mack Motor Truck Corporation with a local branch, and they did not give a cent. Then here is the Pan-American Petroleum Corporation. They did a business in my town last year of about $180,000. They have dozens of filling stations there, but when we asked them to help feed some of those fellows whose old broken-down Fords they had supplied with gas, they refused to give us a penny. Here is the Louisiana Oil Co. and the Shell Petroleum Corporation and the Sinclair Refining Co., and here is our old friend, John D., of the Standard Oil. The Standard Oil does an annual business in my city of about $900,000. They have hundreds of filling stations. They are one of the siphons that I spoke about, drawing out the quarters and the dollars, taking it as they can get it, but returning nothing whatever for charity.

Then here is the Texas Co. It seems to me that I have heard that concern was owned by a gentleman very

Mr. HOWARD. What is his other name?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. His name is "the Texas Co." That is his stage name, and let him rest unknown to fame except as "the Texas Co." He did a business last year in my town of $480,000. I have not the exact figures on these oil concerns; I have computed them from the amount of taxes, based on sales of gas, that the city collected from their filling stations. He did $480,000 of business there and he did not give a cent to relieve the suffering of the starving. I spoke of the Western Union, and now I refer to that genial enterprise known as the Westinghouse Electric Co., that levies a tax upon practically every citizen in my town. They gave us nothing.

Henry Ford did not give a cent. General Motors did not give a cent. So I might go on through this list, but my stomach will not stand that I go farther with this recital.

THEY DRAW OUR SUBSTANCE, THEN LEAVE US TO STARVE

The great mortgage companies have loans in my town amounting probably to more than a couple of hundred millions. They are collecting interest on it when they can. If they had good sense they would try to build up the community so that they could get their money back. They are drawing this interest from nearly everybody, for everybody there has a mortgage on him. That is what makes us so poor. We have to pay so much interest. We have to pay out so much money to these financiers and money lenders. They are drawing this money all the time; it is a constant tax which no man may avoid. And now that our people are starving, they will not give us a penny.

And now I apostrophize:

"How, then, Mr. President, in your august opinion and in the light of the advice of those who surround you, may we, starving as we are, get at these people who have profited at our expense in time of prosperity and who would now abandon us to despair?" [Applause.]

If any Member has an answer to that, I hope he will give it now.

Speaking on the state of the Union and expressing my opinion, I should say it is bad, and one of the worst things about it is that we have a man in charge of the Government who is more interested in the pocketbooks of the rich than he is in the empty bellies of the poor. [Applause.]

And now I come back to where I started. It is sound from the standpoint of humanationism; it is a sound principle of government to guide our action in a time of desperate emergency that "no honest American should be allowed to starve." [Applause.]

A bill authorizing an appropriation for the relief of destitution in the United States

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be available until July 1, 1933, to the President of the United States for the relief of persons residing in the United States who may be in need of the necessaries of life.

SEC. 2. In disbursing the said sum the President shall have authority to use and employ such agencies as he may create for that purpose or as may already exist, and may cooperate with organizations, States, counties, and municipalities upon such terms and conditions as he may deem best, and may disburse same either as gifts or loans of money or of supplies to the beneficiaries.

Mr. RAINEY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] such time as he may desire.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I almost regret at this moment that my record of the years has been a record of opposition to the commission form of government. Were it not so, I might probably now introduce a resolution looking to the creation of a new commission, a commission which would be authorized and directed to make a survey, to consult seers and seeresses, to consult clairvoyants, and every other charlatan on the earth, and then come back and report to this House, if it could, the meaning of several of the meaningless paragraphs in the message read to this House yesterday from the hand of our President. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in the absence of that report, being wholly unable, because of the paucity of my own learning to understand very much of the message, I now, with your permission, turn from an unhappy subject to one fraught with happiness and with beauty. Living now in Washington is a beautiful character, a native of Alabama, a man who on many occasions has written such delightful lines regarding men and measures here in the Capital City that he has now almost reached the point where he is hailed as unofficial poet laureate of the United States of America. I refer to Mr. Horace Carlisle, of Alabama. I know many of the Members of the House are familiar with the man and with his writings.

That great soul has recently written a marvelously beautiful and true tribute to the memory of that wonderful man who but a little while ago was our Speaker and our friend. At the very opening of the House the other day I asked unanimous consent that I might have the privilege to address the House for a moment for the purpose of presenting to the Speaker, and through him to the House, an engrossed copy splendidly framed for adorning the wall of the lobby of the House; an engrossed copy of those lines by Carlisle, in tribute to our loved and our lost former Speaker.

I asked permission then to do so. I now, because of the infirmity of my own speech for the moment, am going to ask the Clerk of the House to read these lines, and then I am going to ask the House to receive this, the most beautiful word tribute that I have known among the thousands as having been paid to that wonderful, that beautiful character, who was with us so long, and who has been lost a while.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read for me, if you please, these lines by Carlisle.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH

"No sex is spared, no age exempt,"
But when Death's angel calls
A silent stillness strikes the heart—
The spirit and the body part—
And time's fixed curtain falls—
And then, from out the friendless gloom
There comes the casket, then the tomb.

But when a man like LONGWORTH dies,
And passes from the earth,
Along hope's unseen way, alone,
Out into faith's divine unknown,
We realize his worth.
The great of earth—search where we will—
Have, after death, grown greater still.

When LONGWORTH, just as Congress closed,
In words that touched us then—
In words so masterfully meek—
Said to us: "I may never speak
From this platform again,"
The bravest of us held our breath—
But never dreamed we of his death.

When Speaker LONGWORTH breathed his last,
The Nation lost a star—
Deep sorrow shrouded every State
Throughout the stricken forty-eight
When LONGWORTH crossed the bar.
Though great in life, we know he will,
In history, grow greater still.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, through you I now desire to present this engrossed copy of these lines to our Speaker, and through him to be presented to the House to adorn a section of the lobby, of his own selection. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. May I ask the majority leader if it is his intention to permit us to sandwich in speeches as they are given on his side with speeches from our side?

Mr. RAINEY. Certainly. Yes, sir. I think it would be better.

Mr. PURNELL. Very well. Then I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, on Monday of this week I saw the gentlemen on the right side of this Chamber take over the leadership of the House. I rejoiced in that they had the wisdom to elect as Speaker a man who enjoys the respect of us all. In my heart I wished them success in the wise conduct of public affairs with which they are now intrusted in this branch of the Congress. I know that many on this side entertained the same sentiment. To-day I confess that I was amazed and somewhat disappointed to find that the majority party had given the floor in this first hour available for the discussion of public questions to a man who would commit his party to the principle that it is the legitimate function of Government to go into the Public Treasury and take out money contributed to the support of Government by millions of our people and give it to a particular group which for the moment is in need. [Applause.] From that proposition, my friends, to which you gentlemen of the majority, judging by the enthusiasm of your applause, have acceded, we on this side of the House beg leave to dissent. Would you commit this Government to a policy of following those who gathered here on Monday to storm this Capitol, to those who would have entered this Chamber and advocated the immediate receipt of doles from the Federal Treasury? By your acquiescence in this first speech of the session from your side it is apparent that this is true. Let me inquire: Is there a man upon this side of the Chamber who now wishes to rise and dissent from committing his party to that kind of policy? If so, let him rise.

Very well, then, the issue is clean-cut. The majority party in the House of Representatives to-day would commit the Government to the principle of a dole.

Mr. LAMNECK. Not I.

Mr. BEEDY. One man rises in dissent, the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. UNDERHILL, Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, and Mr. SIROVICH rose.

Mr. BEEDY. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. UNDERHILL. In other words, this great Democratic Party has abandoned entirely the principles of Jefferson, its founder, for the principles of Karl Marx. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. Let us be perfectly fair. There are men upon this side of the Chamber who do not, I am sure, accept the principles of Karl Marx in their entirety, but they have here acquiesced in one of the underlying principles of the Marxian philosophy, and that is, that it is the function of government to take from the General Treasury a dole for needy people. I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Knowing the gentleman as I do, I hardly think that the cheapness of his demagogic inquiry is creditable to him. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. I regret very much that my friend should have employed the phraseology which he has. I think that perhaps when he thinks it over, he too will regret it. I think the only fair thing which I can do for this majority party which sat here and applauded the speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]; for this majority party which gave the opportunity of making its first speech to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] who they knew was to speak upon his $100,000,000 dole bill, was to give its Members the opportunity of disavowing entire agreement with him. Now, if it is unfair to give men of your party a chance to disavow the dole doctrine, then I plead guilty to your accusation of having indulged in cheap demagogy, of having been unfair.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I thought the gentleman from Maine belonged to that class of statesmen who always felt that when they entertained a difference with another Member the dignified thing to do was to state facts in support of their position, and never did I suspect that the gentleman from Maine would resort to the demagogic practice which we so often hear on the hustings, namely, the asking of a question such as he did to which he never really expected an answer.

Mr. BEEDY. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that your party has the responsibility for procedure in this Chamber as the majority party? Yes or no? That is the first fact I stated.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I did not rise for the purpose of entering into an argument with the gentleman or answering questions.

Mr. BEEDY. I do not yield any further.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. But I wish to characterize properly what I believe to be the true character of your inquiry.

Mr. BEEDY. I do not yield further. The gentleman suggests that I ought to state facts. I stated that the majority party gave the opportunity to make its first speech to a man who it knew was an advocate of the dole. I said that you apparently approved his speech by receiving it with enthusiastic applause. I then gave those who might not accede to the gentleman's speech in its entirety an opportunity to disavow that portion which dealt with a dole, and only one man had the political courage to stand up and make a disavowal. No other man has yet done so. [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Since the gentleman has been selected as the spokesman of the Republican side——

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman does me too much honor.

Mr. SIROVICH. I give the gentleman that honor. Would the gentleman be kind enough to let the American people know, as one of their Representatives, what he would send back as a message to millions of men and women who are starving, willing to work at anything that you could give them, but who have not work and have not food and are starving in their homes? How would the gentleman treat them?

Mr. BEEDY. In the first place, I would reach down in my own pocket and subscribe to the community drives to the limit of my ability.

Mr. SIROVICH. They did that in Alabama.

Mr. BEEDY. All right; that is the first thing to do. The next thing I would do would be to join with the gentleman from Alabama in indicting great corporations who have refused to take from their treasuries, when there were surpluses, money to be given to the poor and needy in time of national extremity.

Mr. SIROVICH. He indicted them.

Mr. BEEDY. And I would also join with one of the recognized leaders of the gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, a man for whom I have great respect because of his public utterances, Governor Ritchie, who stands on the doctrine of State rights, the right of each State to care for its poor. Governor Ritchie has not been heard to advocate the giving of a dole by the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Now, let us be fair to the President of the United States. The statement has been made that the President has gone to the rescue and aid of the bankers, but has not done one thing for the poor and the starving. This assertion was made and was greeted with applause by our Democratic friends. Let us be fair about that.

Did the President advocate that the Federal Government go into the Treasury and give money to any private banks? Certainly not. He advocated that the bankers themselves get together and from their own resources make up a pool of $500,000,000, which could be used how? Principally to strengthen the savings banks of this Nation in which are deposited the hard-earned savings of millions of laboring men. The President was striving to give such banks added security. Thus he would stabilize financial institutions and serve the millions who toil.

Is there, I ask you, a more constructive suggestion that could have been made in this day and time? If so, what is it?

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I can not speak for my party, but as I talk with individual Members I conclude that we on this side of the Chamber stand ready in this day of stress to join with you, who have accepted the responsibilities of leadership in this House, in any constructive legislation which you may propose. However, we can not commit ourselves, nor shall we vote for a radical departure from the doctrines of Jefferson and the great leaders of your party, from what I take to be the stand of conservative, intelligent leaders in your party to-day; we shall not agree that the Federal Government ought properly either to attempt to compel an individual or a business concern to do charity or to go into the Federal Treasury and distribute funds to the needy in the way of charity. We do not consider it a legitimate function of government. Yet our President and every man in this Chamber has just as much feeling for the poor and the needy in this hour of distress as has my friend from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. I know he is sincere in his expressions in that regard.

I am sorry my good friend from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] thinks I have been unfair in what I have said. I am about to yield back the remainder of my time. Before doing so, I want to say that I shall leave the matter of my fairness to the judgment of the House. This is the first time in more than 10 years on this floor that I have been accused of being cheap or unfair. I regret that charge very much. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, it is with the idea that I might possibly bring to a better degree of understanding and harmony the thought of this Congress or of this body that I take the floor.

I regret demagoguery on the part of anyone, but those who were carried off their feet on this side of the House by the sophistry and sob stuff of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] know full well that it is characteristic of all of his speeches that demagoguery should play the greater part in them. I do not believe the bulk of the Democratic Party, either here or elsewhere, subscribes to his particular doctrine, nor do I believe he speaks for the party. I have too much regard and respect for this great party, which by following the teachings and the example of their great leaders of the past have contributed to the progress and advancement of this Nation fully as much—and I do not consider myself disloyal when I say this—as the Republican Party. It is because they have followed such teachings that they have been great. It is because they have sacrificed, where sacrifice has been necessary, partisanship in order to stand by patriotism.

I believe I am a much better Democrat, a much better Jeffersonian Democrat, than the gentleman who recently addressed you.

Why should we wait until one is dead to pay tribute to a man, to his fairness, his ability, his undoubted interest, and his honesty, as my friend HOWARD did to-day to our late lamented Speaker? If there was any probability—and God hope that there is not—that the President of the United States should be taken from us to-morrow, there is hardly a man on this side of the House who would not pay a tribute to his honesty, to his integrity, to his efforts to rehabilitate the Nation. They would not indulge in partisan utterances or insinuation or innuendo against him or his policies or his principles.

So why can we not get together at this particular crisis in our country's history? Why can we not lay down a program? If you do not like the program or policies of the President of the United States as enunciated in his message, instead of personal attack or criticism offer something as a substitute for them; but let it be along lines that you and your forefathers in the past adopted and followed and not along lines or demands of those who were out in the plaza on Monday last. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the House is now meeting in the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of permitting individual Members on both sides of the aisle to express their individual views relative to the President's message. I do not understand that anyone claims the right to speak for either of the great parties, and certainly the majority party has commissioned no individual Member to speak for it.

So far as this side of the aisle is concerned, it has been announced in a very positive way that the President's message will be carefully studied, and that a statement will be publicly announced later as to a legislative program which this side of the aisle will propose and endeavor to enact. [Applause.]

I was surprised that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], whom I have held in high regard, after announcing that he interpreted a speech made by a Member on this side as favoring a Government dole, and that since such Member was permitted to make the first speech, he assumed he spoke for the majority party on that subject, and then, without any semblance of propriety, he propounded to this body of intelligent men, large in number, that cheap demagogic question that we so often hear on the stump before large, mixed crowds, "Do you or not? Answer yes or no." Then he sought, to my astonishment, to construe the silence that followed as an acquiescence in the conviction of his pronouncement and interpretation. [Applause.] We once had a self-styled statesmen whom our people in Alabama often heard and who indulged in that kind of campaign speech, but he has long ago been discarded, and my friend from Maine was the last man who I thought would try to ape him by propounding such a question to this intelligent body of his colleagues. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. Inasmuch as the gentleman has referred to me, will he allow me to ask him whether he approves of the dole or agrees with the sentiments that I tried to express?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I suggest that the gentleman put his questions one at a time.

Mr. BEEDY. That is my question.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I understand the question the gentleman would like me to answer is whether I favor a dole. I say, no. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. Fine.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Permit me to say further that you will not find many Members of this Chamber, in my opinion, who favor any kind of dole unless they become convinced that notwithstanding the very serious and distressing conditions that now obtain in our country your party now in control of the Senate and of the executive branch of the Government is unwilling to cooperate in providing employment for honest men who are destitute and willing to work. Then extreme and undesirable measures may have to be taken. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen of the press complain that they are unable to hear distinctly what is said when a Member speaks from the well of the House. I am going to speak from this position in the hope that they will hear what I say and will tell the country that the keynote speech of this political debate, made by a Democrat presumably selected and approved by the Democratic leader, was put forward in defense of the principles enunciated by communistic orators on the Plaza in front of this building on Monday. I hope that the gentlemen of the press will let the country know what the keynote speech said. I do not desire to indulge in any colloquy with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], but I would point out to him that his party can not avoid the responsibility for what his leader did in advancing the dole as the first thing to be laid before the United States as the program of the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, during the 16 years I have been a Member of the House with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] I recall the fact with much pleasure that it has been very seldom I have agreed with him on a matter of legislation. [Applause.] But I have always entertained the kindest personal regard for him. For many years I have thought that every Member of this body had a right to express himself as to what he thought and that he had a right to vote as he pleased, but whenever a man assumes leadership of the party, then that moment he makes his party responsible.

As little as I have agreed with the gentleman from Alabama as the years have gone on, I can agree with some of his speech to-day. I can agree with him as to his statement as to his own irresponsibility and I can agree with him certainly that the distinguished and able leader from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] did not have the slightest idea what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] was going to say when he put him forward to lead this attack against the Republican policies and the Republican administration. [Applause.] Because if he had had such idea as to what the gentleman would say, he would certainly have read some of the previous RECORDS, the RECORDS of ancient Congresses when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] made exactly the same sort of an attack against other Presidents of the United States from the time of Woodrow Wilson down to date. The gentleman from Alabama led that same sort of attack against the distinguished and able President Woodrow Wilson, and had some of the few gentlemen who have been political accidents in the late campaign read the RECORD, I do not think they would have so loudly applauded the gentleman from Alabama. He has made a specialty of attacking every governmental policy and every President during the 16 years he has been a Member of this body.

For instance, I recall a time back in August, 1916, when I listened to one of the same sort of speeches, but that was before the gentleman from Alabama had been picked as a leader by the new Democratic organization. At that time, as shown by page 13207 of the RECORD, he made a characteristic speech against the Wilson administration.

He said:

> I protest against conscription; I protest against it as un-American. I protest against the way by which this measure was passed. I protest against such a thing being done without the people of this country being consulted. We have departed from our ideals. We have departed with the things which are consistent with American institutions, and we have done it ignorantly and blindly. We have not been fully advised of what we were doing. As one who has only recently entered the House I protest against such methods. I protest against such a departure from our ideals.

He was then protesting against the Wilson administration, and he has been protesting everything ever since that time that was, in my judgment, consistent with the ideals of good government.

Yet two years later his attacks were made again. Mr. Wilson was in the conduct of a war. He was trying to win that war, and in those times, during the war when this country was suffering and needed cooperation on the Republican side and needed it just as the present President needs it to-day, without the injection of politics in it, this Republican side joined with him and gave him support. [Applause.] At that time the gentleman from Alabama was making the same sort of a speech as he made to-day. I find on page 129 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 8, 1918, another characteristic speech about the Wilson administration. At that time he used almost the same words he uses to-day in attacking the present great President of the United States. He said:

> Students of public affairs see more clearly every day the rise and activities of a dangerous faction in our country. Every day it becomes more apparent that there is a small but powerful group of our citizens who are dissatisfied with old-fashioned Americanism and who long for a change in our national life and institutions, which would give new birth and security to effete ideals and caste systems which, having run their course in Europe, are now about to be there rejected and cast out. This group is dissatisfied with America as the land of democracy, of equality, and of opportunity and would make it over along the lines of their disordered dreams.
